232. ———— Sales under different decrees—Reversal on appeal of decision setting aside sale—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—In execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest of A in a certain property were sold and purchased by B. In execution of another decree, the right, title, and interest of A and C in the same property were sold and purchased by D. In a suit by A the sale to B was set aside, but on appeal the decision of the Court of first instance was, upon consent of the parties, set aside, and the sale allowed to stand good. D sued for possession of the share of A and C in the property purchased by him, and obtained a decree for possession of the share of C only. D now sued to set aside the sale to B and for possession of the share of A. Held that the suit was not barred by s. 2, Act VIII of 1859. CHANNA LAL SAHU v. MANU LAL

233. ———— Subsequent suit on different grounds for same property—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11.—On the 30th June 1855 S, a Lingayat priest, died, possessed of moveable and immovable property. The right of succession to it being disputed, the District Judge placed it under the management of the nazir, under Bombay Regulation VIII of 1827, s. 9. In 1869, B, representing himself as the disciple of S and claiming, as such, to be entitled to the whole of the property left by S, brought a suit (No. 962 of 1869) against the defendant to establish his right to the property in question, and to recover possession of it. The suit was compromised by an agreement, upon which the Court passed a decree on the 23rd March 1870, dividing the property of S in certain shares between B and the defendant. When B and the defendant applied for possession of the property in execution of this decree, the nazir, who had it in his charge, resisted them. The execution proceedings dropped in consequence of the death of B. The plaintiff thereupon (as a disciple of B, deceased) and the defendant sued the nazir separately, each claiming the whole property of S. The plaintiff's suit was rejected on the ground that he failed to prove himself the disciple of B. In that suit the plaintiff produced neither the compromise made between B and the defendant, nor the decree passed on it in suit No. 962 of 1869. The defendant succeeded in his suit, and obtained possession of the whole property. The plaintiff then sued, as the disciple of B, to recover from the defendant the portion of the property of S which fell to the share of B according to the compromise on which the decree in suit No. 962 of 1869 was made. Held by WEST, J., that the suit was barred, first, because the plaintiff had been judicially pronounced not to be the disciple of B in his suit against the nazir to which the defendant was a party as the true successor or primæ facie successor represented by the nazir in that suit. It was not open to those who had as heirs sued the official representative of an estate, and failed, to sue the owner, when ascertained, a second time on the same right. Secondly, because the plaintiff, in his suit against the nazir, was bound to bring forward every ground on which he could claim the property; and if the compromise effected by B was such a ground, that compromise and the decree founded on it ought to have been brought forward to sustain the claim, as it would have shut out a ground of defence consisting of the defendant's superior right. As the plaintiff omitted to do so, the more recent decree, which pronounced him not entitled to any part of the property of S, superseded the earlier one, which ineffectually awarded B a moiety of that property as against that person not in possession; and while that decree was unreversed, another decree could not be made awarding to the same plaintiff one-half of the same property in the same right as against the defendant whom the nazir represented in the earlier suit. Held by PIERCE, J., that the property claimed in the present suit had been specifically awarded to B by the decree of the 23rd March 1870, and if that decree were not time-barred, B or his legal representative could obtain possession by taking out execution proceedings on that decree. The present suit therefore was barred alike by s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859 and s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, and the fact that execution of the decree in suit No. 962 of 1869 was time-barred did not confer on B or any legal heir of his a new right to sue for the estate of S or any part of it. *SHIVALINGAYA v. 234. ———— Suit for same property on different cause of action—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—In 1856 the plaintiff, the zamindar of Tarla (who had attained his majority in 1833), instituted suits for the recovery of the two villages claimed in the present suit on the ground that the villages were jera-yati, and had been temporarily alienated, and he claimed a right of resumption. It was decided that the villages had formed a mokam jaghir from a date prior to that of the permanent settlement, and that, as they did not constitute a portion of the assets of the zamindari at the date of the settlement, there was no right of resumption. Pending those suits, an order was issued by Government which plaintiff construed as a transfer to him of the Government right in the villages, and he founded the present suit upon the lapse of the mokam to Government, and the order transferring the right to him.—Held that the present suit was not res judicata. *RAMA CHANDRA SURYA ARICHANDRANA DEO v. This suit being dismissed on the merits, he instituted another suit, in which he craved a bynamah, or certificate of sale. Held that the second suit was brought for the same causes and subject-matter as the first, and that the plaintiff was therefore precluded by the dismissal of the first suit from obtaining it. LAMB v. 238. ——— Causes of action identical—Title—Test for determination as to res judicata.—The plaintiff purchased certain lands from the heirs of a Mussulman proprietor; the defendant M purchased other lands of the same estate from their co-heirs. In 1864 the plaintiff sued to have the sale to the defendant M set aside. In the course of the suit, however, he admitted that he was in possession of all the lands he had bought, and his claim was therefore rejected. In 1869 the plaintiff brought a suit, in the form of a partition-suit, praying for demarcation of the lands bought by the defendant M and himself. It was treated as substantially an ejectment suit, and rejected on the same grounds as the first suit, namely, his admission as above stated. In appeal to the High Court it was urged by the plaintiff that, since the date of his admission in the first suit, some of his tenants had attorned to the defendant M, and thus deprived him of part of his land; but as this allegation had not been made in his plaint, the Court refused to allow the point to be raised. The present suit was founded on the attornment of plaintiff's tenants to the defendant M alleged to have been made in 1868. The plaintiff contended that, although the cause of action was in existence when the second suit was brought in 1869, yet that it had not been adjudicated upon, and that in appeal he had been prevented from arguing it. Held that the plaintiff was estopped. The causes of action in the second and third suits were identical. Having striven to establish his title by one means and failed, the plaintiff could not establish the same title by other means which were equally at his command when the previous suit was instituted and which were so connected with the grounds on which he in that suit relied, that they ought to have been submitted together for the consideration of the Court. In determining whether a question is res judicata, the Court will have regard to the substance of the previous suit rather than its form. If the cause of action is based on a right identical in both suits, or on the same group of facts infringing that right, the second suit is barred. HASAM IBRAHIM v. MANOHARAM KALIANDAS

239. ——— Suit for share of joint property under an agreement—Subsequent suit as heir.—A Hindu of the Sudra caste died in 1850, leaving him surviving his two widows, B and S, a son M, and daughter D, the children, respectively, of B and S and an illegitimate son, the plaintiff. The plaintiff and M continued to live together for some time after their father's death. But subsequently, owing to domestic quarrels, they lived separately, and the plaintiff was allowed by M a portion of the family property, under an agreement in writing. They were, however, joint and undivided in estate, and continued to be so until the death of M in 1865. In 1866 the plaintiff brought a suit on the agreement, and obtained a decree against B, S, D, and R (a lessee of B) for the property mentioned in the agreement. In 1870 the plaintiff brought a second suit as heir of his father and brother, and claimed the whole of the ancestral property. Both the lower Courts rejected his claim as barred by the previous suit. Held in special appeal by MELVILLE and NANABHAI HARIDAS, JJ., that the claim was not barred, inasmuch as the former suit was brought on the agreement, while the latter was instituted to establish plaintiff's general rights as heir of his father and brother. SADU v. 240. ——— Suit on a family arrangement—Second suit for the same subject-matter as co-sharers—Causes of action.—The defendant's great-grandfather was uncle of one B H, who was the great-grandfather of the plaintiffs, and they (i.e., the defendant's great-grandfather and his nephew B H) were entitled in equal half shares to a certain vatan property. The defendant and his brothers now represented the former, and were entitled to his half share, and the plaintiffs represented the latter, and were entitled to his half share. The plaintiffs' father, B R, lived with the defendant and the defendant's brothers, M and K, as members of an undivided family up to the year 1845, in which year the plaintiffs' father, B R, being then absent from the village, the defendant's brothers, M and K, executed a deed of partition whereby they divided the ancestral property into two equal shares, one-half of which the plaintiffs' father was to receive, the other half going to the defendant and his brothers. The deed, among other recitals, contained a clause to the effect that the plaintiffs' father being then absent from the village, the defendant's brothers would manage his share during his absence, and on his return hand the same over to him on his paying the expenses incurred by them in such management. In 1873 the plaintiffs' undivided brother brought a suit against the defendant and others on an agreement alleged to have been executed between him (plaintiffs' brother) and the defendant and his brothers by which the said brothers had bound themselves to return one-third share to him (the plaintiffs' brother). This suit was dismissed as against the defendant, as he had not been a party to that agreement, and plaintiffs' brother was referred to a separate suit for partition against the defendant. The plaintiffs therefore now brought the present suit claiming their share in the vatan estate. The defendant (inter alia) contended that the suit was barred as res judicata by the former suit, that neither the plaintiffs nor their forefathers had enjoyed the property during the previous 150 years, and that the claim was barred by limitation. Both the lower Courts allowed the plaintiffs' claim. The defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court. Held, confirming the decrees of the lower Court, that the former suit having been brought on an alleged agreement, it did not bar the present suit, which was based on the plaintiffs' hereditary right to sue as members of the family. NILU RAMCHANDRA v. D applied for a re-hearing, which was granted; and on the 30th of December 1871 a decree was again passed against D, in execution of which the same properties were attached on the 9th of August 1872, and purchased at the execution-sale on the 1st August 1874 by E. On the 14th February 1871, D had executed a solehnama and mortgage in favour of G, pledging, among other properties, X and Y as security for a loan made to him by G. D having made default in payment, G obtained a decree against him in terms of the solehnama on the 28th February 1871. Subsequently, D granted another mortgage of the same properties in favour of G. G sold his decree and mortgage to the plaintiff, who in execution of the decree attached properties X and Y.

In these execution proceedings R brought forward the fact of his purchase of the same properties in August 1874, and his claim was allowed, and the properties X and Y released from attachment on the 4th March 1876. The plaintiffs had, on the 8th March 1872, obtained a mortgage from D, on which they had obtained a decree on the 28th September 1874, in execution of which they had attached X and Y; but on R claiming them under his purchase in August 1874, an order was made on the 10th April 1875 releasing X and Y from attachment; and in a suit by plaintiff to set aside that order, they failed as to properties X and Y, on the ground that those properties were not included in the mortgage of March 1872. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiffs against R and D to set aside the order of the 4th March 1876, and to have X and Y declared liable to be sold under the decree of the 28th February 1871, — Held that the suit was not barred under s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859 by the decree in the previous suit, nor was it barred by s. 7 of the same Act. Held also that the purchase by R in August 1874 was subject to the mortgage to G of the 14th February 1871. RADHANATH KUNDU v. 254. — Attachment, Application to remove—Removal of attachment unknown to applicant—Failure of application—Second attachment—Second application to remove—New cause of action.—The plaintiff, mortgagee in possession of certain property, applied for the removal of an attachment placed on it by the defendant in execution of a decree against a third party. In default of payment of Court-fees by the defendant, the attachment was removed, but in ignorance of this fact the plaintiff's application was proceeded with, and ultimately rejected. The plaintiff then brought a suit for a declaration of his right, but it was dismissed, on the ground that the attachment had already been removed. Subsequently the defendant placed a second attachment on the property, which the plaintiff again applied to remove. The defendant contended that the plaintiff's application was barred by the proceedings on the first attachment. Held that the decision on the plaintiff's first application having no object existing on which to operate, the attachment having then been removed, it could not properly be regarded as res judicata at all, since no one was seriously interested in having it decided in a different way; and that supposing submission to that decision on the part of the plaintiff for a certain time could have given it a final effect, there had, as a matter of fact, been no such submission, the plaintiff having done all that was incumbent on him to get the summary inquiry and orders replaced by a formal trial and judgment; and that there was nothing therefore in these proceedings disentiing the defendant to oppose the second attachment. Held also that the second attachment, after the first had been removed, was a new and distinct act, giving rise to a new cause of action, or complaint, to the plaintiff, on which, in any case, he was entitled

Subsequently the auction-purchaser bought from B the rest of the talukh and sued her for possession. J got himself entered as a defendant under s. 73, Act VIII of 1859. Held that there was no identity between the subjects of the two suits, and J's former suit for all that he was then entitled to sue for on the cause of action that he had on the attachment did not deprive him of his right to a fresh and independent judgment in the present case. Held also that the former judgment did not create an adjudication of the cause in the latter suit, and if evidence, it was not conclusive evidence or binding on the Judge. RAM CHUNDEE CHOWDHRY v. Objection was raised under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code by other members, and an order was passed under s. 250 releasing the interest of all members except the lessee. Within one year of the order, the present suit was brought by the decree-holder to bring to sale the whole property, on the ground that all the defendants being members of a joint family were benefited by the lease, and were liable for the decretal money. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was barred by res judicata, and that the suits decreed having been for rents of the years 1884 to 1887, the present suit brought in 1891 against the additional parties was barred by limitation. Held (per PRINSEP and GHOSH, J.J.) that the suit would lie, and neither the plea of limitation nor the bar of res judicata was applicable to it. Held (per PRINSEP, J.)—Ss. 278 to 283 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplate the liability of the property to sale, because of its being the property of the judgment-debtor or because it is liable to the decree passed against him as sued in a representative capacity; they do not contemplate a suit to establish the liability of third persons. Nuthoo Lall Chowdhry v. 257. — Continuing contract—Suit for damages.—A, on the 1st of February 1868, entered into a contract with B to supply him with straw for twelve months, the supplies to be sent as ordered daily. On the 12th of March B brought an action in the Small Cause Court against A for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of A's having failed to supply straw as agreed upon. The Judge decided the questions in issue (namely, of the factum of the contract and the authority of the person who executed it in A's behalf) in favour of B, and gave him a decree. On the 21st of April, a second suit was brought by B against A on the same contract. The claim was for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of A's having failed to supply straw as agreed from the 20th of February to the 17th April. That suit was dismissed, the Judge holding that the matter was res adjudicata, as he considered that the contract was an entire one, and that B had shown by suing on it for general damages, that he treated it as such, and had elected to rescind it. On the 9th of May a rule nisi was granted for a new trial, and on the 16th of May the rule was made absolute. On the 12th June, at the new trial, a decree was made in favour of B for so much of the damages claimed as had been sustained subsequently to the date of the decree of the 25th March. In an action brought by B on the same contract for damages sustained between the 17th April and the 16th of June, by reason of A having failed to supply straw according to the terms of the same contract, A denied that there had been any such contract and further pleaded that the matter of the contract, if there had been one, had already been adjudicated upon. On a reference from the Small Cause Court,—Held that the finding of the Judge upon the contract in the action brought on the 12th of March was conclusive between the parties, and that A's plea of res adjudicata was not well founded. *COOK v. The plaintiffs now sued S and others, on the ground that they were joint proprietors of the land mortgaged, that the loan was taken by D and B, as managers for the use of all the parties interested, and for carrying on their joint business and trade, and that therefore they were all jointly liable. Held that the suit could not be maintained. *Ramnath Roy Chowdhry v. A second suit was then brought by the judgment-creditor against both sharers, for the purpose of making the share of the co-sharers, who had not been previously sued, available to satisfy the defendant, and praying that the order releasing the property from attachment might be set aside. Held that such a suit would lie, and would not be barred as res judicata. *NOBIN CHANDRA ROY v. Before the hearing of the suit, B intervened, alleging that he had purchased a 6 annas share of the patni, and he was made a defendant. A then discovered that his co-sharers in the patni had sold their remaining shares to C. A applied to make C a party to the suit, and subsequently for leave to withdraw the suit. Both these applications were refused, and a decree for the arrears of rent was made. A, alleging that he did not wish to enforce the decree in the previous suit, then instituted this suit against C and the defendants in the former suit, for the purpose of recovering arrears of rent for the years 1874 and 1875 from C in proportion to the share purchased by him. Held that the relative position of C to the defendants, whose share he had purchased, resembled that which exists between persons who have made themselves jointly and severally liable to perform a particular contract; and that, as a decree obtained against of rent. In execution of the decree of 1872, M caused L's rights and interests in mousah A to be put up for sale, and purchased them himself. In 1874 B sued L and M to enforce his lien on mousah A. M defended this suit on the ground that he was the holder of a prior lien on the property. The Court gave B a decree in 1875, holding that he was entitled to an order for the sale of the property, but that it would be competent to M to sue to enforce his lien; and that, when he did so, the purchaser under B's decree would have the option of discharging the first incumbrance. The property was accordingly put up for sale in execution of B's decree, and was purchased by B himself. In 1876 M sued L and B to enforce his lien on the property, claiming to recover by the sale thereof the amount of the arrears of rent awarded by the decrees of 1872 and 1873, together with the costs awarded him in the Revenue Court, and interest. Held, affirming the judgment of STUART, C.J., that the decree of 1875 did not preclude M from claiming to enforce his lien on mousah A, nor was his claim affected by the circumstance that he had brought to sale in execution of the decree of the Revenue Court the rights and interest of L in that mousah. All that was then sold was the equity of redemption, which was sold to satisfy the money-decree held by M. No doubt, the proceeds of the sale would, after satisfaction of the costs of the decree, go pro tanto to the satisfaction of the sums secured by the first incumbrance, but M, by selling in execution the mortgagor's equity of redemption, did not forego his incumbrance. Held also that M could not enforce his lien for the recovery of the costs incurred by him in the Revenue Courts, as the surety-bond did not provide for the payment of such costs; that he could enforce his lien for the recovery of interest, as that bond did provide for the payment of interest; and that the moneys realized by the sale of the equity of redemption of the property in the execution of the Revenue Court's decree of 1872 must be applied, in the first place, in satisfaction of the costs of the suit in which that decree was made, and then in satisfaction of the arrear sued for in that suit, or the balance of that arrear, and of the arrear sued for in the second suit, with interest at the rate agreed upon in the surety-bond from the date of the accrual of those arrears until realization. *BARULAL v. In contravention of this agreement, A appealed and obtained a decree for possession of the entire piece of land, whereupon B instituted a suit claiming to have possession of the same in terms of the agreement. Held that the agreement was valid, although its

This suit was dismissed on the ground that no disposition had taken place, the plaintiff being referred to a Small Cause Court for his damages. No appeal was made against this decision. In March 1887 the plaintiff sued these defendants in the Munsiff's Court for possession of 5 bighas 6 cottahs of land and for mesne profits, and obtained a decree for possession of 8 bighas 6 cottahs of land with mesne profits; possession of the one bigha, the subject of the suit of 1886, being included in the 3 bighas 6 cottahs decree. He subsequently sued the same defendants in a Small Cause Court for damages for the paddy cut and carried on the 23rd December 1885. Held that such suit was not barred by either s. 13 or s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. *MAHABEER SINGH v. After the cession, the suit was made over for trial to the Court of the Assistant Commissioner of the Jhansi district. The suit was dismissed by the first Court as barred by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but remanded by the lower Appellate Court for trial on the merits. Held that the recital in Part II of Act XVII of 1886 shows that it was intended that suits pending in the Courts of the Gwalior State prior to the cession of the town of Jhansi to the British Government should be continued in the Courts of the Jhansi district after the cession thereof; therefore the present suit which, if it had been originally instituted in a Court of British India, could not have been maintained, being an action on a judgment of a Court of British India, was a good and maintainable action in the Court where it was instituted, and is to be deemed to be a properly instituted suit to which in other respects the law of the Courts of British India may now be applied. *King v. of rent. In execution of the decree of 1872, M caused L's rights and interests in mouzah A to be put up for sale, and purchased them himself. In 1874 B sued L and M to enforce his lien on mouzah A. M defended this suit on the ground that he was the holder of a prior lien on the property. The Court gave B a decree in 1875, holding that he was entitled to an order for the sale of the property, but that it would be competent to M to sue to enforce his lien; and that, when he did so, the purchaser under B's decree would have the option of discharging the first incumbrance. No doubt, the proceeds of the sale would, after satisfaction of the costs of the decree, go pro tanto to the satisfaction of the sums secured by the first incumbrance, but M, by selling in execution the mortgagor's equity of redemption, did not forego his incumbrance. Held also that M could not enforce his lien for the recovery of the costs incurred by him in the Revenue Courts, as the surety-bond did not provide for the payment of such costs; that he could enforce his lien for the recovery of interest, as that bond did provide for the payment of interest; and that the moneys realised by the sale of the equity of redemption of the property in the execution of the Revenue Court's decree of 1872 must be applied, in the first place, in satisfaction of the costs of the suit in which that decree was made, and then in satisfaction of the arrear sued for in that suit, or the balance of that arrear, and of the arrear sued for in the second suit, with interest at the rate agreed upon in the surety-bond from the date of the accrual of those arrears until realization. BABULAL v. 268. — Suit for possession—Agreement not to appeal—Suit for possession in terms of agreement.—A, having sued B for possession of a piece of land and obtained a decree for possession of portion only, entered into an agreement, by the terms of which he was to take a greater part of the land than he was entitled to under the decree upon the condition that he (A) should not prefer an appeal, and that, in the event of his doing so, the whole land claimed in the suit should become the property of B. In contravention of this agreement, A appealed and obtained a decree for possession of the entire piece of land, whereupon B instituted a suit claiming to have possession of the same in terms of the agreement. Held that the agreement was valid, although its effect was practically to render the former suit inoperative, and further, that the previous suit between the parties was no bar to B's suit, a new cause of action having arisen upon the breach of the agreement. JATI RAM TALUKHDAR v. DASS RAM KOLITA [3 C. L. R., 574]

269. — Damages—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 13, 43.—In September 1886 the plaintiff sued in a Munsif's Court certain defendants for possession of one bigha of land, and for damages for the cutting and carrying of certain paddy from such land on the 23rd December 1885. This suit was dismissed on the ground that no dispossession had taken place, the plaintiff being referred to a Small Cause Court for his damages. No appeal was made against this decision. In March 1887 the plaintiff sued these defendants in the Munsif's Court for possession of 5 bighas 6 cottahs of land and for mesne profits, and obtained a decree for possession of 3 bighas 6 cottahs of land with mesne profits; possession of the one bigha, the subject of the suit of 1886, being included in the 3 bighas 6 cottahs decree. He subsequently sued the same defendants in a Small Cause Court for damages for the paddy cut and carried on the 23rd December 1885. Held that such suit was not barred by either s. 13 or s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. MAHABBER SINGH v. 270. — Suit on judgment in a Native territory—Civil Procedure Code, s. 12—Jhansi and Morar Act (XVII of 1886), s. 8—Decree made in British India—Cession of territory to British Government pending suit.—Prior to the cession of the town of Jhansi to the British Government, plaintiff had instituted a suit in the Subah's Court in the Gwalior State on a judgment of the British Court in Jhansi district. After the cession, the suit was made over for trial to the Court of the Assistant Commissioner of the Jhansi district. The suit was dismissed by the first Court as barred by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but remanded by the lower Appellate Court for trial on the merits. Held that the recital in Part II of Act XVII of 1886 shows that it was intended that suits pending in the Courts of the Gwalior State prior to the cession of the town of Jhansi to the British Government should be continued in the Courts of the Jhansi district after the cession thereof; therefore the present suit which, if it had been originally instituted in a Court of British India, could not have been maintained, being an action on a judgment of a Court of British India, was a good and maintainable action in the Court where it was instituted, and is to be deemed to be a properly instituted suit to which in other respects the law of the Courts of British India may now be applied. King v. 271. — Reasons for decision—Estoppel by former judgment—Final decision of same question.—A party to a suit is not estopped, merely by the reasons which a Judge may give for his decision. 273. — Opinions not material to decision—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13—Judgment—Decree.—In order to see whether a question is "res judicata" within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the former decree and the questions decided thereby must alone be considered. The words in s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "has been heard and finally decided by such Court," do not apply to an opinion expressed in the judgment on other issues not material for the purpose of the decree, though properly determined under s. 204 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the Court of first instance. Niamut Khan v. 274. — Decree not in conformity with judgment—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13—Omission to make reservation in decree though in judgment.—It is by the decree and not by the judgment that a question of res judicata must be decided. In 1881 A sued K and others claiming a declaration of his title to certain land and an injunction against interference with his possession. K claimed part of the land by purchase from M. The Munsif decreed for A, and this decree was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge, but in his judgment the District Judge recorded that K's claim was not adjudicated upon, and that he should bring a fresh suit if he had any claim. In 1883 K sued A to recover the land, which he claimed by purchase from M. A pleaded that the claim was res judicata by virtue of the decree in the former suit. The District Munsif and, on appeal, the District Judge held that the claim was not res judicata, and decreed for K. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that as no reservation was made in the decree of K's right to bring another suit, the plea of res judicata was good, but that, under the circumstances, an opportunity should be given to A to apply to the District Court to have the decree in the former suit brought into conformity with the judgment. This having been done, the decree of the lower Courts was confirmed. AYALA v. KUPPT [1 L. R., 8 Mad., 71]

275. — Finding in judgment not embodied in decree—Suit for enhancement of rent—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—N brought a suit against P for enhancement of rent. P's defence was, first, that no notice of enhancement had been given; secondly, that the rent was not enhanceable, as he and his predecessors in title had held it at a fixed rent from the date of the permanent settlement. The suit was dismissed on the ground that no notice had been given; but the Munsif stated in his judgment that he considered the rent enhanceable, because he did not believe in the genuineness of the documentary evidence produced by P. The decree merely ordered that the suit should be dismissed, the portion of the judgment as to the enhanceability of the rent not being embodied in the decree. P therefore had no right of appeal against that portion of the judgment. Is a subsequent suit by N against P for enhancement of rent of the same tenure,—Held that, on the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Soorjeemann Day v. Suddanund Mohapatra, 12 B. L. R., 304, and Krishna Behari Roy v. Banwari Lal Roy, I. L. R., 1 Cal., 144, P was precluded, by the decision in the former suit, from denying that the rent of the tenure was enhanceable, although the decision on that point was not embodied in the decree. The material findings in each case should be embodied in the decree, and, if they are not, it is incumbent on the parties, to avoid their being bound by decisions against which they have no right of appeal, to apply to amend the decree in accordance with the judgment. NIAMUT KHAN v. 276. — Objections by respondent to decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 13, 540, 561, 594.—In a suit to obtain possession of certain property, and to set aside a deed called a deed of endowment (wakfnama), on the ground that the defendant had fraudulently obtained its execution, the defendant pleaded (i) that the deed was a valid one, and (ii) that she was in possession of the property in satisfaction of a dower-debt, and her possession could not be disturbed so long as the debt remained unsatisfied. The Court of first instance held that the deed was valid, but that the defendant was entitled to remain in possession of the property till her dower-debt was satisfied and the Court passed a decree which merely dismissed the suit, without embodying the finding as to the deed. On appeal by the plaintiff to the District Judge, the defendant filed objections under a 561 of the Civil Procedure Code in regard to the first Court's decision that the deed of endowment was invalid. The Judge dismissed the plaintiff's appeal, affirming the finding as to dower, and, refusing to decide the question of the validity of the deed as being unnecessary for disposal of the claim, disallowed the defendant's objections. The defendant appealed to the High Court. Held by the Full Bench (OLDFIELD and MAHMOOD, JJ., dissenting) that if a decree is, upon the face of it, entirely in favour of a party to a suit, such decree being the thing which by law is made appealable, and nothing else, that party has no right of appeal therefrom. If, in the judgment of which such decree is the formal expression, findings have been recorded upon some issues against that party and he desires to have formal effect given to them by the decree, so as to allow of his filing objections thereto under a 561 of the Civil Procedure Code or of appealing therefrom under a 540, he must take steps under a 206 to have the decree properly brought into conformity with the judgment, so that there may be matter on the face of it to show that something has been decided against him; but if he fails to take this course, the decree, though in general terms, will stand good as finally deciding the issues raised by the pleadings upon which the ultimate determination of the cause and the decree itself rested. The findings in a judgment upon matters which subsequently turn out to be immaterial to the grounds upon which a suit is finally disposed of as to the plaintiff's right to any portion of the relief sought by him as declared by the decree amount to no more than obiter dicta, and do not constitute a final decision of the kind contemplated by a 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held also that in the present case the Judge was right in holding that the question as to the validity or otherwise of the deed of endowment was wholly immaterial. The judgment of STRAIGHT, J., in Lachman Singh v. Mohon, I. L. R., 2 All., 497, approved and followed. Per OLDFIELD, J., contra, that the decree, to agree with the judgment and fulfil the requirements of a 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, should contain the material points for determination arising out of the claim and material for the decision thereon; that if this has not been done, the defect is a good ground of appeal, notwithstanding that the decree, on its face, may be altogether in favour of the appellant, and notwithstanding that he may not have applied for amendment of the decree under a 206, or for review of judgment; and that, in the present case, the defeat in the decree would afford a good ground of appeal. Per MAHMOOD, J., that inasmuch as the provisions of a 13 of the Civil Procedure Code relate as well to the trial of issues as to the trial of suits, and in the present case the validity or otherwise of the deed was a matter directly and substantially in issue between the parties, and was adjudicated upon, the finding of the first Court upon that issue was not a mere obiter dictum, but he would be binding upon the defendant as res judicata notwithstanding the fact that the suit against her was dismissed on the ground that she held possession of the property in lieu of dower; that whatever has the force of res judicata is necessarily appealable; that the word "from" as used in a 540 or a 584, and the expression "objection to the decree" in a 561 refer not only to matters existing upon the face of the decree, but also to those which should have existed, but do not exist there; and that the defendant in the present case was aggrieved or injured by the omission in the decree of the first Court, and was therefore entitled to file objections to it, and, for the same reason, to appeal to the High Court from the decree of the lower Appellate Court. Also per MAHMOOD, J., that it was doubtful whether the reliefs contemplated by ss. 206 and 623 were open to the defendant; but that, even conceding that she ought to have sought her remedy under either of those sections, her neglect to do so did not make her incapable of obtaining the same result by the exercise of her right of appeal. *Anusuyabai v. 277. — Incidental finding—Appeal from favourable decree.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that certain lands were his, and for possession of them. Defendant No. 1 claimed the ownership of the lands; defendant No. 2 claimed to be mortgagee in possession. The decree simply dismissed the suit; but the lower Court found, as a fact, that the ownership of the lands was in the plaintiff, although the plaintiff was not entitled to possession of them by reason of the mortgage to defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 1 now appealed on the ground that, although the decree itself was entirely in her favour, she would be prejudiced in any future proceedings if the finding of fact as to the ownership of the lands were left unchallenged. Held that the appeal would not lie; for the decree is what must be looked to to see what was conclusively decided, and there was nothing in the decree actually passed which the plaintiff could afterwards use as res judicata in his favour; and an appeal is not admissible on any point not having the authority of res judicata. An adjudication is only conclusive evidence of the facts established therein or properly tending thereto; hence from a simple judgment against him a party cannot deduce anything in his favour as res judicata, for nothing in his favour can have been an essential element of an adverse decree. ANUSUYABAI v. SAKHRAS PANDURANG

278. — Collateral issue—Dismissal for want of notice.—Where a suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates for a certain year was dismissed for want of notice, but the Court also found that the pottah set up by defendant was not genuine, Held that the decision was no bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff for arrears of rent at enhanced rates for a subsequent year. A matter which is directly adjudicated upon by a Court of competent jurisdiction can be treated as res adjudicata, but not

285. ————— Suit to set aside will—Question as to validity of will—Suit for possession—Cause of action.—C, a Hindu subject to the Mitakshara law, adopted S, and afterwards B, and made a will, whereby, after providing for his widow, the family worship, etc., he made a division of his real and personal property between his two adopted sons. Provision was also made for forfeiture by either of the sons in case they disputed the will in which event the whole estate was to go to the other son. This will was registered and filed in the Collector's Court. S was subsequently disowned by C and declared to have forfeited his right to anything under the will. In 1859 S brought a suit against C, B, and certain persons who claimed portions of the property under deeds executed by C, to cancel those deeds, to cancel the will, to set aside adoption of B, and for maintenance. In this suit he alleged that C had no power to make any of the devises of real estate contained in the will, inasmuch as the whole estate, consisting of property inherited by C and property acquired by him from the income of such inherited property, was ancestral. The only issue raised in that suit referring to the will was whether it was assented to by S. The first Court found that it had been so assented to; that the adoption of B was valid; and that S's conduct justified C in disinheriting him: the suit was accordingly dismissed. S appealed to the High Court, and in his grounds of appeal raised the same contention as before, viz., that the whole of the real property was ancestral, and therefore C had no power to dispose of it without his consent. The High Court in 1865 varied the decree of the first Court, and held that the will must be set aside so far as it affected the rights of S in the ancestral property, but that the ancestral property only included that inherited, and not that acquired by C with the income of the inherited property. In a suit brought by S, after the death of B and C, against B's widow and the parties to the former suit, or their representatives, to obtain possession of the whole estate of C on the ground that both the inherited property and the property acquired from the income thereof were ancestral.—Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that, although the issue as to the assent of S to the will clearly embraced only a portion of the controversy between the parties, the Court had jurisdiction, and indeed was bound, to decide whether or not the will was operative as to all or to any and what portion of the property, and that its decision on that point was binding on the parties. According to the general law relating to res judicata, where a question has been necessarily decided in effect, though not in express terms, between parties to a suit, they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form. S. 2, Act VIII of 1859, does not prevent the operation of this general law. 286. Suit by C for mesne profits of land as devisee under will of A—Will held valid and C's claim allowed—Application by C as legal representative of A for execution of decree obtained by A—Question of validity of will again raised.—A obtained a decree against B for possession of certain land, and then died. Thereupon C applied for execution of the decree as A's legal representative, relying upon a will made by A in his favour. At the same time, C filed a suit to recover Rs 140 as mesne profits of the land. The execution-proceedings were stayed till after the disposal of the suit for mesne profits. In this suit B contended that the will in question was not executed by A, and that A was not of sound disposing mind at the time of the alleged execution of the will. The Subordinate Judge found on both these points against B, and passed a decree for mesne profits. This decree was upheld, on appeal, by the District Judge. After the decision of this suit, the Subordinate Judge took up C's application for execution of the original decree obtained by A. This application was resisted by B on the same grounds on which he had defended the suit for mesne profits. He impeached the validity of the will on the grounds of non-execution by, and unsoundness of mind of, the testator. The Subordinate Judge held that the matter was res judicata; he therefore overruled this objection, and ordered execution to issue. The District Judge held that, as the suit for mesne profits was in the nature of a Small Cause suit, in which there was no second appeal, the decision passed in that suit did not operate as res judicata in the present execution proceedings. He therefore reversed the Subordinate Judge's order, and remanded the case for a fresh decision. Held, reversing the remand order, that the question whether C was entitled to execute the decrees as A's representative fell within the last clause of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, viz., "determined in a separate suit." The Subordinate Judge, who had raised an issue as to the validity of the will relied upon by C in the suit for mesne profits, was entitled to act upon his determination of that issue in the execution-proceedings. BHAVANISHANKAR v. and for possession, the first defendant pleaded that the question of his adoption was res judicata in a former suit. In that suit between the present plaintiff's son as plaintiff and his father (the present plaintiff) as the first defendant, and the present first defendant, the alleged adopted son, as second defendant, the latter was found to be the adopted son of the undivided brother of the present plaintiff. Held that the first defendant's adoption was not res judicata. Ayyavu Muppanar v. This was reserved by the High Court on appeal, who held that the decree should have been simply a decree of dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. B died, leaving an adopted son, D. C sued D for recovery of possession of the property, the subject-matter of the former suit, on the ground that D was not the adopted son of B, and that C, who came within the class of bandhus, was entitled to succeed to the property left by A and B, there being no nearer heir in existence. 291. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13—Estoppel—Privity in estate.—A competent Court having decided upon an issue directly raised in a suit brought by a person alleging himself to have been adopted that this adoption had not taken place, it was held that the present suit was barred under Act X of 1877, s. 13, as res judicata, having been brought by the son of the defendant in the former suit, claiming through his father, to establish the same adoption; and that the section applied, although the suits related to different properties. The establishment of the adoption alleged in the first suit would have obliged the father of the present plaintiff to share with the adopted son his ancestral estate. That adoption having been negatived, the son, in this suit, ought to be estopped from making title on the ground that the adoption had placed the person, from whom he claimed to inherit, in the relation of father's brother to him. VENKATA MAHIPATI GANGADHARA RAMA RAO v. 292. ——— Issue in former suit—Former decrees in favour of plaintiff, but issue as to adoption found against him—No appeal open to plaintiff against that finding—Subsequent suit to recover property on strength of adoption.—One S died in September 1878, leaving a widow B. The year before his death his only son (Bala), a child eight years old, had left his home and was never heard of again. A few days before his death, S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption, which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive, and that he had therefore adopted the plaintiff. The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. The plaintiff had previously sued one K, the father of the defendants, in another suit (No. 804 of 1885) to recover certain other lands. In that suit it had been held that the plaintiff was not the adopted son of S, but that nevertheless he was entitled to recover the lands sued for on the strength of the above-stated deed of adoption, and a decree was passed for the plaintiff. Held that the issue as to adoption in that suit was not res judicata in the present suit. In the former suit the plaintiff recovered upon the deed. He could not have appealed from the decree which was in his favour, nor could he, under the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), appeal from the finding upon the adoption issue which was against him. Upon that issue there had not been a final decision. RAYGO BALAJI v. MUDIRAPPA . . . I. L. R., 23 Bom., 296

293. ——— Pending suits—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 12 and 13—Malikana—Different reliefs claimed.—For the purpose of the rule of res judicata, it is not essential that the subject-matters of the present and the former litigations should be identical. Where a recurring liability is the subject of claim, a previous judgment dismissing a suit between the same parties upon findings which do not go to the root of the title on which the claim rests, but relate merely to a particular item or instalment, cannot operate as res judicata. But if such previous judgment negatives the title and main obligation itself, the plaintiff cannot re-agitate the same question of the title by claiming a subsequent item or instalment. Rajah of Pittapur v. Buchi Sittya Garu, L. R., 12 I. A., 16, referred to. The pendency of litigation regarding rent, malikana, or other demand for one year does not, under s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code, bar a suit between the same parties in which the same demand is made for a subsequent year, inasmuch as the reliefs claimed in the two cases are different. Ss. 12 and 13 of the Code compared. On the 17th August 1835 a suit was instituted for recovery of an annual malikana allowance for the years 1290, 1291, and 1292 Fasli. On the 5th October 1885 the Munsif dismissed the suit. On the 10th March 1886 the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the Munsif's decree, and decreed the suit. On the 21st June 1886 the defendant appealed to the High Court, which on the 4th July 1887 reversed the Subordinate Judge's decree, and restored that of the Munsif, on the ground that the plaintiff had never received and was not entitled to malikana. Meanwhile, on the 8th June 1886, the plaintiff brought another suit against the defendant for recovery of malikana for the year 1293 Fasli, which accrued after the institution of the former suit. By judgments dated respectively the 21st August and 27th November 1886, the lower Courts decreed this suit holding that the Subordinate Judge's decree of the 10th March 1886, in the former suit, operated as res judicata and was conclusive in favour of the plaintiff's title to the malikana. On the 17th May 1887 the defendant appealed to the High Court, and on the 16th May 1888 the High Court having in the interval dismissed the former suit by its judgment of the 4th July 1887 the appeal came on for hearing. Held that the trial of the present suit by either of the lower Courts was not barred by s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code by reason of the fact that, at the time of such trial in August and November 1886, the previous litigation between the parties was pending in second appeal before the High Court. BALKISHAN v. KISHAN LAL

294. ————— Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 12, 48, 244—Proceeding in execution.—A suit, according to s. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, must commence with a plaint, and a proceeding which is capable of terminating in a decree or an order having the force of a decree cannot, on that ground alone, be deemed to be a suit within the meaning of the Code, if it has not commenced with a plaint. Such a proceeding is, in strictness, only a proceeding in a suit. Semble—That a proceeding under s. 214 is not a suit within the meaning of s. 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure. VENKATA CHANDRAPPA NAYANIVARU v. 295. ————— Issue as to rate of rent—Possession—Suit for kabuliati—Decision on right of occupancy.—A suit for a kabuliati in which the rate of rent is the subject matter, and the question of the right of occupancy is not the main point, is not an estoppel to a suit for re-possession under cl. 6, s. 23, Act X of 1859. KHODA BUKSH v. AKOOL GAZER [9 W. R., 595]

296. ————— Issue as to amount of rent—Suit for rent—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—Held, with reference to Act VIII of 1859, s. 2, that where the cause of action is the same in substance in both suits, and where the former suit was so constituted that the parties to the present suit were in direct contest with each other and had full opportunity of asserting their rights, the decision in the former suit is res adjudicata, e.g., decrees passed in suits for patni rent in which the jumma payable is put in issue are decisive as to the amount of such jumma. RAKHAI DOSS SINGH v. 297. ————— Issue as to title—Subsequent suit for declaration of right.—In a former suit A G (appellant) sought to establish his right, in execution of his decree against R R, to have a talukh sold as belonging to R R. D S, a defendant in that suit, pleaded that the whole talukh had been conveyed to him absolutely by his father R R under a hibbanamah. An issue was raised and tried whether the talukh belonged to D S or not; and it was expressly decided that it did not, and that the zamindari was liable to be attached and sold in execution of A G's decree as belonging to R R. Held that it was not open to D S or to plaintiff claiming under him in a subsequent suit to come into Court and ask for a declaration of his right to a half share of the talukh as against A G. ABDOOL GUNNEER v. KISHANUND DOSS alias KEBUL RAM DOSS [17 W. R., 350]

298. ————— Civil Procedure Code, s. 18, expls. I and II, and s. 44.—L was the owner of a 4-anna share in a village. On the 1st March 1880, his childless widow R, and his nephew B, who had separated from his two brothers and lived for some years with both L and R, sold to S one-third of the 4-anna share. The brothers of B sued the vendors and the vendee to enforce a right of pre-emption, alleging that they, as well as B, had acquired and entered into exclusive possession of the estate of L as his heirs. In the second appeal in this suit the High Court held that, as it was proved that the 4-anna share was L's separate estate, and R had succeeded to it and was in possession of it, and thus the plaintiffs had not established a title to, or acquired possession of, any part of the share, the plaintiffs were not in a position to assert a preferential claim to purchase the property in dispute. The plaintiffs also pleaded that the question of the right and title asserted by them as the actual heirs of L should have been tried and determined in the suit; but the High Court rejected this plea on the ground that the suit had been based merely on the allegation of de facto possession, and that their claim was to obtain by purchase one-third share only, and not for any remedy in respect of their right to possession by inheritance of the entire 4-anna estate. Subsequently to this decision, the same plaintiffs, alleging equal rights with B as reversionary heirs of L, sued the same defendants for a declaration of the incompetence of R, the widow, to alienate the property, and that the sale-deed might be declared, as against them, null and of no effect. The cause of action was stated to be the execution, on the 1st March 1830, of the deed of sale. Held that the plea of res judicata failed. The matter now substantially in issue between the parties, viz., the presumptive title of the plaintiffs to possession of the property, had not been "heard and finally decided" in the sense of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. Such title was not "alleged and denied" by the parties in that suit, within expl. I, s. 18. It was not matter which "might and ought" to have been made the ground of attack in the former suit, within expl. II. The law does not require a plaintiff at once to assert all his titles to property, or to be thereafter estopped from advancing them. A plaintiff may with the leave of the Court (s. 44, Civil Procedure Code) join causes of action, but he is nowhere compelled to do so. The cause of action in the second suit, although the date of its accrual was the same, was separate and distinct from the cause of action asserted in the previous suit. SHEO RATAN SINGH v. 299. ————— Issue as to account—Suit for money due on bond—Act X of 1877, s. 18.—M sued R in the Court of the Munsif for a bond, alleging that he had satisfied the bond-debt, and for a certain sum which he alleged had been paid by him to R in excess of the bond-debt. On the 24th November 1875 the Munsif, having taken an account and found that Rs 188-7-4 of the bond-debt were still due, made a decree dismissing the suit. R appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who on the 16th September 1876, finding that Rs 20-2-2 of the bond-debt were still due, affirmed the Munsif's decree. M appealed to the High Court on the ground that an appeal by R did not lie to the Subordinate Judge, as R was not aggrieved by the Munsif's decree. The Division Bench before which the appeal came, on the 10th August 1877, holding that R was not competent to appeal to the Subordinate Judge, set aside the proceedings of the Subordinate Judge. In deciding the case the Division Bench made certain observations to the effect that the account between the parties was not finally settled, but might be taken again in a fresh suit. In November 1877, M instituted a fresh suit against R to recover the bond on payment of Rs 188-7-4, the sum found by the Munsif in the former suit to be due by him to R. Held, on the question whether the finding of the Munsif in the former suit was final and conclusive between the parties or the account might be again taken, that that finding, being a finding on a matter directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, which was heard and finally decided by the Munsif, was final and conclusive between the parties, and the account could not be again taken. Held also that the observations of the Division Bench in the former suit were mere "obiter dicta" which did not bind the Courts disposing of the fresh suit. MOHAN LALL v. RAM DIAL . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 843

300. ——— Issue as to satisfaction of money-bonds—Subsequent suit on bonds—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 45—Matter directly and substantially in issue—Meaning of "suit" in Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13.—S sued K for four bonds, alleging that the same had been satisfied. K had formerly sued S on two of these bonds. S had alleged in defence of that suit that those two bonds, as also the other two, had been satisfied. It was decided in that suit that not one of the bonds had been satisfied. Held by PETHERAM, C.J., and OLDFIELD, BRODHURST, and DUREOIT, JJ., that the only issue in the former suit which had to be decided being whether the bonds on which that suit was brought had been satisfied or not, the second suit was, under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, res judicata only in respect of those bonds, and not in respect of the other two bonds. The Court which tried the former suit had not jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit. Per MAHMOOD, J.—This being so, if the word "suit" in s. 13 were taken literally, it might, with some plausibility, be contended that there was no res judicata in respect of any of the bonds. The word "suit," however, must be understood to mean such a matter as might have formed the subject of a separate suit independently of the special provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, such as s. 45, which enables this plaintiff to unite several causes of action in one and the same suit. Adopting this interpretation, it was clear that the two bonds which were the subject of the former suit could not be allowed to form the subject of litigation again. As to the other two bonds, which were not the subject-matter of the former suit, they did not, in the former suit, constitute a "matter directly and substantially in issue" within the meaning of s. 13, and, even if they were 'directly and substantially in issue,' the decision in the former suit would not support the plea of res judicata, because the Court which tried that suit was not a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit in which the plea was raised. SHEORAJ RAI v. KASHI NATH . . . I. L. R., 7 All., 247

301. ——— Issue as to validity of mortgage—Suit for possession—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13, expts. I and II.—H, the proprietor of a one-third share of a certain undivided estate, made a gift of such share to P. He subsequently, in February 1875, gave a mortgage of such share, in his capacity as P's guardian, to N and S, the two other co-sharers of such estate. In March 1878 P, having attained his age of majority, brought a suit, as a co-sharer of such estate, under such gift, against N and S for possession of certain land appertaining to such estate, on the ground that they were using such land as if they were the sole proprietors thereof. The lower Appellate Court, observing that such land was the property of the three co-sharers, that the mortgage of P's right to N and S did not affect those rights as such, and that N and S were not justified in using such land as if they were the exclusive proprietors thereof, gave P a decree for possession of one-third share of such land. N and S appealed to the High Court on the ground that P should not have been awarded possession, as they were in possession of such land as mortgagees. The High Court remanded the cases for the determination of the issue thus raised by N and S, and the lower Appellate Court found that N and S were in possession of P's share of such estate as mortgagees under the mortgage made by H above referred to and of such land as such. P did not take any objection to this finding; and it was adopted by the High Court and embodied in its final decree. In October 1879 P sued N for possession of his share in such estate, claiming under the gift from H and alleging that the mortgage of such share by H to N was invalid. Held that, inasmuch as such mortgage was matter substantially in issue in the former suit, the matter in issue in the second suit was res judicata under expts. I and II, s. 13 of Act X of 1877. NIEMAN SINGH v. PHULMAN SINGH . I. L. R., 4 All., 65

302. ——— Issue as to interest on instalment bond—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13—"Subject-matter" of suit.—The obligee of a bond payable by instalments sued the obligor for four instalments, claiming, with reference to the terms of such bond, interest on such instalments from the date of such bond. The obligor contended in that suit that, on the proper construction of the bond, the interest on such instalments should be calculated from the dates of default. The obligee obtained the decree for interest as claimed. The obligee subsequently again sued the obligor for four instalments, again claiming interest on such instalments from the date of such bond. The obligor contended again in the second suit that interest should only be calculated from the dates of default. Held that the question as to the date from which interest due on the defaulting instalments was exigible under the terms of such bond was res judicata. It is the "matter in issue," not the "subject-matter,"

303. — Issue as to right to property—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13, expl. I—Issue previously determined.—N sued W for a moiety of a brick-kiln, claiming by right of inheritance, and alleging in respect of the other moiety that it was his own property. W in her defence to the suit denied that N had any right in the kiln, and that a moiety of the kiln belonged to him. An issue was framed on the point whether a moiety of the kiln belonged to W, which the Court of first instance decided in N's favour. N eventually obtained a decree for a moiety of the kiln, which he claimed by right of inheritance. W appealed, contending, inter alia, that it was not proved that a moiety of the kiln belonged to N. The appeal was decreed, and the decree of the Court of first instance in N's favour was set aside. W subsequently sued N for the value of bricks which he had wrongfully taken from the kiln. N set up as a defence to the suit that a moiety of the kiln belonged to him. Held that the issue whether a moiety of the kiln belonged to N was res judicata under s. 13, expl. I, of the Civil Procedure Code. WILAITI BAGAM v. NUR KHAN

305. — Issue of law erroneously decided—Decree prohibiting erection of temple—Rights of rival religious sects—Right to open temple for worship.—The erroneous decision by a competent tribunal of a question of law directly or substantially in issue between the parties to a suit does not prevent a Court from deciding the same question, arising between the same parties in a subsequent suit, according to law. In a suit in 1950 between the Tenkalais and Vadakalais, rival religious sects, represented by the plaintiffs and defendants respectively, the Vadakalais having endeavoured to open a temple for public worship in a certain public street, were, by the decree of the Sudder Court, prohibited from erecting a temple or instituting public worship on the spot of ground objected to by the Tenkalais and which lay within the range of the Tenkalai temple, i.e., within the usual range of the processions conducted in connection with the temple worship. In 1879 the Vadakalais opened a temple for public worship on another site, their private property, in the same street.

307. — Issue as to validity of grant—Issue not decided in former suit.—In a suit to recover, with mesne profits and other incidents, a jerayati village alleged by the plaintiff to form part of the zamindari, and to be wrongfully held by defendant by virtue of the execution of a decree of the late Commissioner of the Northern Circars passed in 1844, the defendant pleaded that he held on a permanent lease subject to a fixed quit-rent, that he and his ancestors had held on that tenure since and previously to the permanent settlement, and that the quit-rent had been received from him by the plaintiff. The Agent dismissed the suit, on the ground that the matter had become res judicata against the plaintiff by a former decree in 1807. Held that the matter of the present claim was not res judicata, because the question of the existence and validity of the alleged grant, on which the defendant relied, was not determined in the former decree. VAIRIOHARLA SUBYA NARAYANA v. S was made a defendant on the ground that he held one plot as under-tenant to P. S claimed to hold under N. As to this plot, the issue raised was whether the land was held by S under P; the decision, that S did not hold under P, but under N since 1828; the decree, that P's suit be dismissed as to this plot. Held, in a suit brought in 1881 by P against N and S to recover the same plot of land, that the suit was not barred by reason of the previous decision in 1874. ANANDA RAMAN VATHIAR v. The tenants pleaded that they were not bound to accept the pottah tendered by virtue of an implied contract, which entitled them without exchange of pottah and muchalka to hold the land permanently at a lighter rent. The District Munsif and, on appeal, the District Court decided that no implied contract had been proved by the tenants. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the pottah tendered was not one which the tenants were bound to accept under Act VIII of 1865 (Madras). The landlord then sued in the Revenue Court to compel the tenants to accept a pottah for Fasil 1291 (1881-82), and the tenants again put forward the same plea. Held that the question whether the tenants were entitled to hold permanently at a lighter rate without exchange of pottah and muchalka was not res judicata by virtue of the decree in the former suit. MUTTUKUMARAPPA REDDI v. 310. — Issue as to transferability of tenure—Estoppel—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13.—Plaintiff having brought a suit to recover damages for the removal by the defendants of certain crops, alleging (1) that he was transferee of the jote upon which the crops were, and (2) that he had purchased the crops, it was objected that the transfer to the plaintiff was invalid. It being found that the crops in question had been purchased by the plaintiff as alleged by him, he obtained a decree for damages for their removal. The plaintiff now brought a second suit as transferee of the jote to recover possession of it from the defendants, who again pleaded that the transfer was invalid. Held, reversing the decision of FIELD, J., that the defendants were not estopped, under s. 13, (xpl. II, of the Civil Procedure Code, from setting up that defence, inasmuch as the question of the transferability of the jote was immaterial in the first suit and had not in fact been determined, and the question of estoppel was not raised by the parties themselves. CHURN MANJEE v. 311. — Issue as to right of pre-emption—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 562, 568 (28)—Second appeal—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 565, 566—Determination of case by High Court.—In a suit for pre-emption, based on the wajib-ul-urs of a village, the Court of first instance dismissed the claim on the ground that no right of pre-emption had been proved to exist in the village. The lower Appellate Court, dissenting from this opinion, reversed the first Court's decree, and remanded the case under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code for a decision on the remaining question of fact, viz., the amount of the consideration for the sale. On appeal from the order of remand, the High Court, on the 3rd January 1884, observed that it was not disposed to interfere with the finding of fact that the plaintiffs had a right of pre-emption, and accordingly dismissed the appeal, but added that the Judge was in error in remanding the case under s. 562 of the Code, that his order must so far be set aside, and that he should proceed under s. 565 or s. 566, as might be applicable. The Judge, on receipt of this order, replaced the case on his file, remitted an issue to the Court of first instance, under s. 568, as to the amount of consideration, and, accepting the first Court's finding upon that issue, decreed the plaintiffs' claim. In a second appeal by the defendants the High Court was of opinion that the Judge had disposed of the case upon a condition of things which the plaintiffs had never asserted, inasmuch as he had treated the right of pre-emption which was in issue as one arising from custom, and not, as alleged by the plaintiffs, as arising from a contract between the ancestors of the parties. All the evidence necessary to the determination of the case was on the record. Held by the Full Bench that the defendants were not prevented by the operation of the High Court's order of the 3rd January 1884 from disputing the right of pre-emption, inasmuch as that order was a decision of a merely interlocutory character passed in the same suit, and the questions of fact involved therein were decided only so far as was necessary for the purpose of passing the order, and it could not be regarded as determining the main question in the suit which was still open, and must be decided in the final decree in the suit. Per STRAIGHT, J., that the jurisdiction of the High Court in appeal under s. 568 of the Code from the Judge's order of remand was, like the jurisdiction of the Judge in passing the order, limited by the terms of s. 562; and hence the remark made in the High Court's order, dealing with the plaintiffs' right of pre-emption, could only be regarded as an obiter dictum, and not as determining any question as to the pre-emptive right. DEOKISHEN v. Thereupon A, who in the meantime had been ousted from possession, brought a subsequent suit in which B and C together with others were co-defendants, in which he claimed an undivided share in the same garden. Held that under the circumstances the doctrine of res judicata did not apply, and that such suit was maintainable. DOORGA RAM PAL v. 315. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Collateral decision on title.—K died leaving a widow, M, as his heir. M also died leaving a will in favour of B, who accordingly applied for letters of administration with the will annexed. This application was refused by the District Judge, who granted a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to one G. Upon this B sought his remedy in a suit before the Subordinate Judge, who held that, the property being that of the husband, the widow's will passed nothing to plaintiff, and that, although the evidence in favour of G was doubtful, yet the Court could not say that he was not her heir. In a suit by G against B for the rents of the property accruing since the widow's death, where G contended that the decision of the Subordinate Judge operated as a bar to the questioning of his title,—Held that the principle of res judicata did not apply. GOOROO CHURN SIRCAR v. 316. ————— Issue incidentally raised—Suit for possession.—In 1852, T acquired a plot of land, X, under a Government grant. In 1851 N, claiming to be the owner of the adjoining plot Y, granted a lease of it to R; but in 1853 another lease of the same plot was granted by an agent of N to G. In 1859 G sued T to recover possession of lot X as being part of plot Y, and obtained a decree, against which T appealed to the Privy Council. Pending the appeal, R sued G for possession of plot Y, and obtained a decree against G. Meanwhile, R having failed to pay rent, plot Y was put up for sale, and purchased by the present respondent. In 1872, the respondent, who was unable to get possession of his purchase, obtained leave to be admitted a party respondent in the appeal to the Privy Council, and filed a case averring that the interests of the original respondents had ceased, and that he was, pending the appeal, precluded from enforcing his rights. The Privy Council held that the plaintiff G had not proved that plot Y included plot X, but they stated that they did not adjudicate upon any question of title between the respondents on that appeal, or N or any other person's interest in plot Y. The present respondent subsequently sued T's representative for possession of plot X as being parcel of plot Y. Held, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that the respondent's claim was res judicata by reason of the previous judgment of the Privy Council. BELOHAM-SHERS v. 317. ————— Order of remand—Decision of question of title—Suit for possession.—In 1814 litigation commenced between a zamindar and his tenants by reason of his having dispossessed them of lands held under a jote tenure, and a decree having been obtained by the tenants, the zamindar assessed the jote lands at a certain rent. Subsequently this rent fell into arrear, and under a decree the jote lands were in 1836 sold in satisfaction of the arrears to J, who was put in possession in 1839. Another suit, which was pending between the tenants and their mortgagee, in which a question arose whether these jote lands were included in the mortgage, was decided in favour of the mortgagee in 1841. J, the then jote tenant, was no party to that suit, and continued in possession of his jote lands. Disputes arose, and by an order of the Sudder Court in 1845 the jote lands were directed to be put in possession of the mortgagee. In 1856 a suit was brought by J's representative to set aside that order and to recover possession of the jote lands. The Privy Council held that, as J, the jote tenant, was not a party to the suit under which the decree was made in 1841, the decree was not binding upon him or those deriving title through him, and remanded the case in order that the issue whether the land was parcel of the jote or not might be tried. Held that this order of remand was conclusive that the question of the title of the representatives of J to the jote lands could not be re-opened. JUGGODUMBA DOSSEE v. 318. ————— Suit for possession dismissed on ground of want of title in vendor—Suit for recovery of purchase-money in which title set up as a defence.—On 8th February 1889 the defendant sold to the plaintiff, under a registered conveyance containing no express covenant for title, land of which he was not in possession, and the purchase-money was paid. The plaintiff and the defendant sued to recover possession, but failed on the ground that the vendor had no title. The plaintiff now sued on 7th February 1895 to recover with interest the purchase-money and the amount of costs incurred by him in the previous litigation. Held that the defendant was not entitled to give evidence of his alleged title, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought by him. KRISHNAI NAMBIAR v. 319. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13—Suit for right to molikana and for registration of names—Decision in previous suit—Court of competent jurisdiction.—Previous to 1825 dearah X accreted to mouzah Y, and some time before 1860 the maliks of Y executed two conveyances in favour of A and B respectively. In 1860 A sued B in the Munsif's Court for possession of a share in X, which B claimed under his conveyance. In that suit A succeeded on the ground that B's conveyance did not cover the share claimed by him in X, but merely covered the share in the mouzah itself, whereas by his conveyance A had acquired the right to the share in X, which he claimed. In 1866 the Collector refused to recognize B's right to malikana payable in respect of the share in X which had been the subject of the suit in 1860 or to register his name in respect thereof, but acknowledged A's right thereto, relying on the decision of the Civil Court in the suit between A and B. Subsequently B's representatives, C and D, in 1876 sought to have their names registered in respect of the same malikana, but they were opposed by E, who alleged that A had been acting throughout as his benamidar. Their application was eventually disallowed on reference by the Collector to the Civil Court. C and D thereupon instituted the present suit against E in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration of their right to the malikana and for a reversal of the order refusing to allow their names to be registered in respect thereof. Held that the suit was barred as res judicata, on the ground that the right to malikana was substantially the same question as the proprietary right to the share in the darsah, and that this issue had been tried and decided in the suit in 1860 in favour of A, who must be taken to be E. In a suit for malikana the issue between the parties substantially raises the question of the proprietary right to the estate in respect of which the malikana is claimed, and when the question of the proprietary right has been decided in a previous suit between the same parties, a subsequent suit for malikana will be barred as res judicata. GOPI NATH CHOBBY v. Finality of decision—Suit for possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—In a suit to recover possession of certain land, where it appeared that there had been a previous suit between the same parties with respect to the same land, in which the then plaintiffs sought to have their possession confirmed, and that in that suit the lower Courts had decided the case both on the question of title and of possession, but on special appeal the High Court had dealt only with the question of possession, and in dismissing the appeal had not gone into the question of title, and the defendant in that suit subsequently sued to recover possession of the land, Held that the question of title was still open between the parties, and had not been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit within the meaning of s. 13 of Act X of 1877. GUNABISHEN BHUGUT v. Landlord and tenant—Suit for ejectment—Issue previously heard and determined—Estoppel—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13.—In a suit by a landlord against his tenant for ejectment the defences were (1) no notice to quit had been served; and (2) the tenure was a permanent one. The suit was dismissed on the first ground, the Court holding at the same time that the tenure was not a permanent one. In a subsequent suit for ejectment from the same holding brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant the defences were: (1) the tenure was permanent; and (2) the plaintiff was estopped by the conduct of his predecessor in title from asserting as against the defendant that the tenure was not a permanent one. The lower Appellate Court found the question of estoppel in favour of the defendant and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court, Held that the decision was right, and must be affirmed. Semble—That where a former suit between the same parties in respect of the same subject-matter has been dismissed on a preliminary point, a finding in that suit on the merits in the plaintiff's favour will not bar the defendant from putting forward the same defence on the merits in a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant. Semble—That the case of Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia, I. L. R., 6 Calc., 319, has been implicitly overruled by the case of Ran Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koor, I. L. R., 12 I. A., 23; I. L. R., 11 Calc., 301. NUNDO LALL BHUTACHARJEE v. Suit for ejectment—Plea of right of occupancy—Issue not finally decided.—A as ticcadar brought a suit to eject B from certain lands which he claimed as majhes land or land which is ordinarily cultivated by the landlord himself or by the ticcadar. B pleaded his right of occupancy. The Court found that the land was majhes land, but dismissed the suit on the ground that A had failed to prove notice to quit. Afterwards A brought a suit against B for ejectment from the same land. B again pleaded his right of occupancy. Held that B was not precluded from raising the same plea, inasmuch as the finding in the previous suit upon the issue whether B was an occupancy tenant was not conclusive against him: nor could that issue be said to have been "finally decided" in that suit within the meaning of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. Ran Bahadur Singh v. Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, s. 13—Matters directly and substantially in issue in a suit.—Where a decree awarding to one of the parties money deposited in a treasury by a third party as the compensation for land taken by the latter for railway purposes, was based upon the right to the land, the question of title having been directly and substantially in issue between the parties, Held that the contest of title was conclusive between them under s. 13 of Act X of 1877. In a suit brought by a ghatwal to resume, as determinable at will, an under-tenure granted by one of his ancestors of land, part of the ghatwali mehal, it was alleged for the defence that the under-tenure was permanent. A prior judgment upon conflicting claims made by the ghatwal and the under-tenure-holders to receive the above-mentioned compensation-money, which had been paid in respect of lands in part comprised in the under-tenure, determined that the ghatwal was entitled to the money being founded on the under-tenure holders having been in possession of it by the mere sufferance of the ghatwal who could put an end to it

Question incidentally decided—Boundary dispute.—Where, in a suit for some land, a Judge had considered it necessary to find out the boundary between two villages, and had given a decision in favour of one of the parties, who in a second suit of the same kind, but with reference to some other land, brought in the former decision to show that the land in dispute in the second suit must be his if the finding as to the village boundary in the former suit was correct. Held that the finding as to the village boundary in the former suit was conclusive only as to the land in dispute in the former case, but did not make the former decision conclusive as to the boundary line itself. MONI ROY v. 325. ——— Defence not raised in previous suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13, expl. (ii)—Estoppel.—Expl. (ii) of s. 13 of Act X of 1877 was meant to apply to a case where the defendant has a defence which, if he had so pleased, he might, and ought to, have brought forward; but, as he did not bring it forward, the suit has been decreed against him. Under such circumstances, the defendant is as much bound by the adverse decree as if he had set up the defence, and he is equally estopped from setting up that defence, in any future suit under similar circumstances. The explanation was never intended to enable a party to treat a point of law as having been decided in his favour in a former suit which was in fact not so decided, and which it was not necessary, for the purposes of the suit, to decide at all. GHURBOHIT AHIR v. Party raising only one defence, having others—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—When a plaintiff claims an estate and the defendant, being in possession and knowing that he has two grounds of defence, raises only one, he shall not, in the event of the plaintiff obtaining a decree, be permitted to sue on the other ground to recover possession from the plaintiff. Woomatara Debia v. Where therefore the defendants purchased an estate in the plaintiff's possession and sued him to recover possession of it, and the plaintiff resisted the suit merely on the ground that he was the auction-purchaser of it, and the defendants obtained a decree and the plaintiff then sued claiming a right of pre-emption in respect of the property, a claim which he might have asserted in reply to the former suit, —Held that he was debarred from suing to enforce such claim. BALDEO SAHAI v. 327. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2, and 1877, s. 13—Omission to raise defence—Subsequent suit.—In a suit for rent and for ejectment, the defendant pleaded that his tenure was transferable and istemrari, and consequently protected by the rent law. In a former suit for arrears of previous years in which the defendant pleaded that his tenure was istemrari, the plaintiff obtained a decree for ejectment on non-payment of rent within fifteen days. In that case the defendant saved his tenure by payment within the time stated. Held that, inasmuch as the defendant might in the former suit, in which the nature of the tenure was put in issue, have urged that his tenure was both transferable and istemrari, he could not in the present suit be allowed to alter his defence and rely upon the tenure being transferable. Woomatara Debia v. The father of A and B having died, A, alleging that his father's assets amounted in value to Rs12,000 and admitting that he (A) had received Rs1,000, part thereof, in 1866, sued B, whom he alleged to be in possession of the rest of the property, for Rs5,000, as the residue of A's share, and obtained a decree for a half share in immovable property of their father of the value of about Rs700, and no more. In 1871 B sued A for a moiety of the Rs1,000 which A, in his suit in 1866, had admitted to be in his possession. Held that such a suit could not be maintained, as the claim on which it was founded must be deemed a res judicata in A's suit in 1866. MAKTUM VALAD MOHIDIN v. prior suit what then would have been a defence—Accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee.—A mortgage between parties who had accounts together, comprised lands which also were leased by the mortgagors to the mortgagees, who in 1878 obtained a decree upon the mortgage, although at the time they owed to the mortgagors a considerable sum for rents. The mortgagors did not then set up the defence that they were entitled to have a general account taken and to have the mortgagee's decrees limited to such balance as might be found to exist in favour of the latter. But the mortgagors alleged a specific agreement, which they failed to prove, that the rents were to be set off against the mortgage-debt; and they also stated their intention to sue separately for the rents due. No deduction was made in the decrees upon the mortgage on account of these rents, for which, moreover, afterwards the mortgagors did obtain a decree. But the mortgagees executed their decrees upon the mortgage, notwithstanding objections (which were disallowed in 1882), and, having obtained leave to bid at the judicial sale, purchased the property. In the present suit brought by the mortgagors to have the judicial sale set aside, and to have the mortgage-debt extinguished, by having set off against it the rents which had already accrued, or might afterwards accrue, and for possession of the lands on the expiry of the lease,—Held that, although an equity had been raised in favour of the mortgagors, that an account would have been taken, and that the rents payable should have been credited against the sums due by them, yet this equity could not be enforced in this suit. The proper occasion for enforcing it would have been in defence of the suit upon the mortgage; the present claim was within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the plaintiffs were now barred from insisting on it, exceptions res judicatae. MAHABIR PRASHAD SINGH v. 332. ——— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. II—Suit for dower debt after previous suit for partition amongst heirs—Omission to bring forward defence in former suit.—Two of the daughters of a deceased Mahomedan sued the remaining heirs for partition of the inheritance, and a decree for partition was made, which was confirmed on appeal by the High Court. Pending the appeal to the High Court, two other daughters of the deceased, who had been parties defendants in the suit for partition, brought a suit by which they claimed a large share in the estate of the deceased as part of the dower debt due to their mother. In this suit they impleaded as defendants all the surviving descendants of their deceased father. Held that the claim for dower should have been made a ground of defence in the former suit by the plaintiffs who had been defendants in the suit for partition, and that, as no such defence had been set up in that suit, the claim in respect of the dower debt fell within the purview of expl. II to s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the suit was barred, not only as against the plaintiffs to the former suit, but

334. ——— Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13—Ancestral property—Partition—Omission to insist on property being brought into hotchpot—Property out of the jurisdiction—Subsequent suit for partition.—The three defendants, G, B, and K, and their brother M, the grandfather of the plaintiff, were members of one family possessing undivided ancestral property consisting of the villages of B, P, and S, the two former being situated in the Poona Zillah and the latter in the Satara Zillah. In 1866 the three defendants (each in a separate suit) sued M in the Poona Courts for partition of the villages of B and P. They in their plaints alluded to the village of S, stating that it was their own and not subject to partition. M in his answer contented himself with denying the right to partition of the villages of B and P, and made no claim, in the alternative, to a share in the ownership of S. The plaintiff, the grandson of M, now sued the defendants in the Satara Courts for partition of the village of S, contending that he was not concluded from so doing by the former proceedings in the Poona Courts. Held that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata, and that his suit was concluded under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13, expls. I and II. A member of an undivided family, suing his co-parceners for partition of family property, is bound to bring into hotchpot any undivided property in his own possession, in order that there may be a complete and final partition, and cannot claim to withhold any such property on the ground that it is situated within another jurisdiction. That being so, the plaintiff's grandfather M having neglected in the previous suit to make the exception of the village of S a ground of defence,

N did not in defence of such suit assert a right of pre-emption in respect of such moiety, although such right had accrued to him on its sale by the mortgagor to B. S and B obtained a decree in such suit, and the mortgage was redeemed. N subsequently sued B and his vendor to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of such moiety. Held that it was incumbent upon N in the former suit to have asserted in defence his right of pre-emption in respect of such moiety, inasmuch as, if that right had been established, it must, so far as B was concerned, have proved fatal to his title to redeem; and that, as he had not done so, the suit to enforce his right of pre-emption was barred by the provisions of s. 13 of Act X of 1877, expl. 336. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13.—B, who held a decree for money against I, caused certain property to be attached in execution of such decree as the property of his judgment-debtor. M, the wife of I, objected to such attachment, claiming such property as her own. Her objection was disallowed, and she consequently brought a suit against B to establish her right to such property. She died while that suit was pending, leaving by will such property to her sons. That suit proceeded in the names of her sons, who claimed such property under such will. The lower Courts only decided in that suit that such property belonged to M, and not to I, and it was therefore not liable to be sold in execution of B's decree against the latter. They did not consider the question whether M's sons were entitled to such property under their mother's will. In second appeal in that suit B contended that I, as heir to M, was entitled to a fourth share of such property, and such share was liable to be sold in execution of such decree. M's sons did not contend before the High Court that they were entitled to the whole of such property under their mother's will to the exclusion of I. The High Court allowed B's contention. B brought a fourth share of such property to sale in execution of his decree and purchased it himself. Thereupon M's sons sued him for such share, claiming it under their mother's will. Held that their mother's will was a matter which should have been made a ground of defence by M's sons in the course of the trial of the second appeal in the former suit between them and B, and that, not having been so made, it was res judicata in the sense of s. 13,

R died in January 1861, and was succeeded by J and P, two daughters, the last of whom died on the 31st December 1880. On her death, the grandsons succeeded to the estate. On R's death, J and P got possession of all estate papers, and amongst them a dowl granted by the tenants in return for the amulnama. In 1865 proceedings were taken by the tenants to obtain kabulyats on the footing of those documents, which proceedings came to an end in 1868. In 1873 J and P instituted suits against the tenants, alleging the amulnama and dowl to be forgeries and seeking to enhance the rents payable to them as well as to have it declared that R's acts did not bind them. In these suits it was found that J and P had all along been aware of the claim made by the tenants that they held a permanent tenure, and the suits were dismissed on the ground that it was too late for J and P, after the lapse of twelve years from R's death, to raise the question. In 1884 D, a receiver, instituted a suit in the names of the grandsons to eject the tenants on amongst other grounds that the grandsons (reversioners) were not bound by E's acts, and that the jungleburi tenure was not binding on them; that the tenants were middlemen and had no right of occupancy; that at all events the plaintiffs were entitled to rent on the area of land then held by the defendants, as there had been large accretions to the amount covered by the amulnams and dowl. The defendant, amongst other things, pleaded res judicata, and that E had the power to grant the jungleburi tenure so as to bind the reversioners. Held that the suit was not barred by res judicata, as in the suits brought by J and P the question of whether E's acts bound the reversioners was never decided. DROBOMOYI GUPTA v. DAVIS

340. — Specific performance—Decree in favour of plaintiff—Rectification of decree on application of defendant—Motion to set aside decree dismissed—Subsequent application to rectify decree.—The plaintiff sued in 1877 for specific performance of an agreement, dated 27th September 1871, by which certain landed properties were to be divided, as specified in the agreement, between them and the defendants. The case came on for hearing on the 13th September 1878. The defendant did not appear, and a decree ex-parte was made, which declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed, and referred the suit to the Commissioner for the preparation of conveyances, etc. The decree was sealed on the 9th October 1878. No further steps were taken by any of the parties for six years, and in September 1884 the matter was first brought before the Commissioner. He then directed the defendants to lodge with him all the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the plaintiffs as their share. The defendants thereupon applied that the plaintiffs should be directed to lodge the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to them, but the Commissioner refused to make this order, being of opinion that he was not authorized to do so under the decree, which contained no direction to him in respect thereof. The defendants on the 10th November 1884 gave notice to the plaintiffs that they would apply to the Court—(1) "to set aside or vary its order of the 13th September 1878 so far as it related to the lodging of title-deeds, etc.; (2) to appoint a receiver of certain properties mentioned in the agreement; (3) to order the plaintiffs to deliver up to the defendants the properties which belonged to their share under the agreement; (4) to order certain accounts to be taken." This motion was not brought on until the 10th September 1885, on which day it was dismissed with costs, the Judge holding that the defendants had not shown sufficient cause to justify the setting aside of the decree under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiffs having still kept possession of certain of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the defendants, notice was given by the defendants to the plaintiffs on the 28th April 1887 that they would apply to the Court for an order that the plaintiffs should perform their part of the agreement of the 27th September 1871, so far as it remained unperformed by them, by giving up to the defendants possession of certain properties and by accounting for the rents thereof, etc., etc. At the hearing of this motion, counsel for the defendants asked that the decree should be rectified by directing that the agreement should be specifically performed by the plaintiffs and defendants respectively. The defendants contended that the application was barred by lapse of time, and that the question was res judicata by the order of the 10th September 1885. Held also that the motion was not res judicata by reason of the previous order of the 10th September 1885. Although the notice of motion then served by the defendants on the plaintiffs included matters in respect of which the defendants sought relief by their present application, the Judge in making the order dealt with them as ancillary to the first and main point raised in that motion, viz., the defendants' right to set aside the decree under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Having decided that point against them, he did not really consider the other points at all, and did not adjudicate upon them, and therefore the present application in respect of these matters was not res judicata. KARIM MAHOMED JAMAL v. 341. — Suit for specific performance of a contract of sale and to execute a sale-deed—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13, expl. 2—Sale-deed subsequently executed by the Court under s. 262 of the Civil Procedure Code—Suit on sale-deed to recover possession.—The plaintiff, claiming specific performance of a contract of sale, sued the defendant to compel him to execute a deed of sale, alleging that he had paid the purchase-money to the defendant and had obtained possession, but was subsequently dispossessed. The plaintiff had claimed the value of the standing crop or damages for the same. The Court found that the plaintiff had paid the purchase-money, but had not got possession, and ordered defendant to execute a deed of sale. On failure of the defendant to do so, the Court executed a deed of sale in plaintiff's favour under s. 262 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover possession on the strength of the deed of sale. Defendant pleaded that this second suit was barred under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that the suit was not barred by s. 13, and that expl. 2 of that section was not applicable, because the object of that explanation would seem to be to compel the plaintiff to rely on all grounds which were open to him in support of the claim made by his plaint, which in the first suit was confined to obtaining a regular deed of sale. NATHU PANDU v. One or other of the brothers then for some years managed the estate as shebaita, and the survivor of them was succeeded by his son, one of the defendants in the present suit, which was brought by the testator's only daughter as heiress to his estate, claiming that the Court should determine "those provisions which were valid and lawful, and those which were invalid and illegal." She claimed possession and an account, and also to be the shebait. In a previous suit the present shebait had obtained a decree, to which the daughter, now plaintiff, was a party defendant, affirming the validity of the will and the rights of the members of the family to be maintained under it. Held that the question of the validity of all the provisions of the will having been substantially decided in the decree in the former suit, which pronounced that the will was wholly valid, passing the entire estate of the testator to the deb-sheba and maintaining the rights of members of the family under the will, this suit was barred under s. 13 of Act X of 1877 as to all but the claim to be shebait. KAMINI DEBI v. 343. ——— Estoppel by judgment—

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Act IX of 1847—Alluvion.—To apply the law of estoppel by judgment, stated in s. 6 of Act XII of 1879 and in s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882, it must be seen what has been directly and substantially in issue in the suit and whether that has been heard and finally decided, for which purpose the judgment must be looked at. The decree is usually insufficient for showing this, as, according to the Code, it only states the relief granted, if any, or other disposal of the suit, without the ground of decision and without affording information as to what may have been in issue and decided. The suit was to establish a right to land, and for possession, against two defendants, who alleged their rights retrospectively. The claimant had previously obtained a decree against one of the defendants, and in that decree the land now claimed had been excepted. Held that the matter now in issue, not having been directly and substantially in issue in the prior suit, the present suit was not barred under s. 13, Act XIV of 1882, Civil Procedure Code. KALI KRISHNA TAGORE v. 345. ——— Suit for redemption—

Decree for redemption without proviso for foreclosure of payment within a fixed time—Subsequent suit by mortgagee for sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 18, expl. II.—A decree for redemption which does not provide for payment of the mortgage-debt within a fixed time, or for foreclosure in case of default, operates of itself as a foreclosure decree, if not executed within three years. After such a decree is passed, it is not open to the mortgagee to file a suit to recover the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged property, his right of sale being barred under s. 13, expl. II, of the Code of Civil Procedure. On 12th November 1883 A obtained a decree for redemption on payment of a certain sum of money to B (the mortgagee). The decree contained no direction as to foreclosure or as to the time within which the payment was to be made. On 26th November 1884 B, the mortgagee, sued to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the property mortgaged. On 8th April 1885 A paid into Court the sum directed to be paid by the redemption decree. B refused to accept the payment, and insisted upon his right of sale. Held that the mortgagee having neglected to obtain a provision for sale in the redemption suit, as he might and ought to have done, if he wished to preserve the right of sale, that right must be held, under expl. II of s. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and to have been in effect negated by the judgment. MALOJI v. SAGAJI suit—Appeal by inferior pre-emptor in his own suit—Appellate Court, Power of, to alter decree so as to affect superior pre-emptor's right.—In two rival suits for pre-emption each pre-emptor was made a defendant in the other's suit. The suits were tried together upon the same evidence, and were disposed of by a single judgment, but by separate decrees. In one of the suits the pre-emptor obtained a decree in the terms of s. 214 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the other, the pre-emptor obtained a decree, subject to the condition that, in the event of the first pre-emptor failing to execute his decree, the second pre-emptor should be entitled to execute it. The decree in the first suit was not appealed, and became final. The second pre-emptor appealed from the decree in his own suit, upon the grounds that the amount ordered to be paid was excessive, and that the first pre-emptor had lost his right, and the decree in the second suit should not have been made subject to the condition above stated. Held that the appellant, if he desired to get rid of the decision regarding the first pre-emptor's preferential right, should have appealed against the first pre-emptor's decree, but that, that decree having become final, the question between the two pre-emptors could not be re-opened on appeal from the second pre-emptor's decree. *CHAJJU v. 348. ——— Suit in respect of different portions of joint family property—Material issue in former suit.—In 1876 the plaintiffs, alleging a partition of the family estate in 1864, sued their uncle (father of the present defendants) to recover their share of the rent of a certain piece of land which had formed part of the family estate. The plaintiffs relied in that suit upon a memorandum or agreement of partition executed in 1864. The defendant in that suit, however, contended that the family was still joint, and that the plaintiff could not claim a share of any particular piece of land, but must sue for partition of the whole property. At the hearing of that suit an issue was raised as to whether partition had taken place. The Court found in the affirmative and awarded the plaintiff's claim. In the present suit the plaintiffs sued the defendants (the sons of the defendant in the former suit) to recover possession of certain property which they alleged formed part of the share awarded to them at the partition of 1864, but of which they had been dispossessed by the defendants in 1873. The defendants denied that there had been any partition of the family property. Held that the question of partition was res judicata, and could not be raised again by the defendants. The question had been directly and substantially in issue in the former suit. No doubt, the dispute in that suit was as to a different piece of land, but there was no allegation that that land was held on any different tenure to the land now in suit. The plaintiffs there as now alleged that there had been a partition, and that they had a separate share. The defendants there contended, as the defendants now contended, that there was no partition, and that the family estate was joint. The decree in that suit depended on that issue, and where the decree depends on an issue, the finding on that issue is binding as res judicata. The status of the family, having been thus tried and determined in the former suit, was binding on the parties in subsequent suits. ANANTA BALACHARYA v. DAMODHAR MAKUND

The plaintiff had a daughter named M. Both plaintiff and defendant had since H's death filed separate suits, in which they respectively claimed parts of his estate. In 1879 the defendant had filed a suit (No. 616 of 1879) against the executors of her father-in-law's will to recover certain money belonging to her husband. She obtained a decree, and the suit was referred to the Commissioner to make inquiries. In 1882 the present plaintiff F and her daughter M filed a suit (No. 227 of 1882) against the present defendant A, claiming a share of the estate of her deceased husband H. In that suit she alleged that she had been lawfully married to H and ever since cohabited with him, and that her child M was his legitimate daughter; and she prayed (inter alia) for declaration that she was the lawful wife, and that M was the lawful daughter of H. In the written statement filed by A in that suit, she alleged that F was not the lawful wife of H, but only his kept mistress, and she denied that F was entitled to a share in his property. On the 3rd May 1882, an order of reference was made by which both the above suits, viz., No. 616 of 1879 and No. 227 of 1882, "and all matters in difference therein" were by consent of all parties thereto referred to arbitration. The arbitrators were the respective attorneys of the parties. Awards were duly made, and on the 1st October 1883 decrees were passed in both suits in accordance with the said awards. By the decree and award in suit No. 227 of 1882 F was to be paid by A a sum of Rs55,000 in full satisfaction of all the claims of F and her daughter M upon the estate of H, the rest of the estate being declared the sole property of A. The material part of the decree was as follows: "This Court doth by consent pass judgment according to the said award * * * and doth order that the said A do pay for the said F to her attorneys, Messrs. Tyabji and Dhyabhai, within seven days after the date of this decree, the sum of Rs55,000 in full settlement of all and singular the claims and claim of the said F and M or either of them against or upon the estate of the said H whatsoever and whatsoever * * * and doth declare that upon the payment of the said sum of Rs55,000 by the said A to the said F as aforesaid, all claims whatsoever of the said F and M or either of them upon the estate of the said H in the hands of any person whatsoever or upon the said A as heir of the said H personally or otherwise howsoever, shall be considered to have been fully satisfied by the said A and absolutely waived for ever by the said F and M; and doth further declare that the said A is entitled absolutely to all the rest of the estate and effects of the said H as her sole property as against the said F and M." The defendant A in 1882 also filed another suit (No. 198 of 1882) against her father-in-law's executors, and recovered certain ornaments which she alleged to be her stridhan. In October 1886 A married again, and in December 1887 F filed the present suit against her, alleging that by the law and custom of Cutchi Memons A had by reason of such second marriage forfeited all rights and interests to, and in the property of, her first husband H, and also to the ornaments which she had recovered in the last-mentioned suit, and she claimed that the said property and ornaments now belonged to her (F) as sole surviving widow of the said H. She prayed for a declaration that A had by her second marriage forfeited her right to the said property and ornaments, and that she (the plaintiff) was now entitled thereto; that the defendant might be ordered to deliver, etc., etc. The defendant A filed a written statement in which (inter alia) she contended that the plaintiff was never the wife of H, but had been merely his kept mistress; that in suit No. 227 of 1882 she (the defendant) had denied that the plaintiff F was the widow of H; that the award and decree in that suit were not made upon the basis of her (F's) being such widow, and she (the defendant) submitted that the said award and decree were a bar to the present suit. It was contended for the defendant (1. that the plaintiff had in the former suit prayed for a declaration that she had been the lawful wife of H; that the decree in that suit contained no such declaration, and that her prayer must therefore be taken to have been refused under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and that she was consequently not now entitled to sue as his widow—her claim to be his widow being res judicata; (2) that the decree in suit No. 227 of 1882 expressly declared that the Rs55,000 awarded to the plaintiff by that decree was in full settlement of all her claim; and that she was therefore precluded from claiming against the estate in any possible contingency; and that therefore the defendant's remarriage gave her no right to sue; (3) that the latter part of the decree amounted to a release and assignment by the plaintiff F to the defendant of all her (the plaintiff's) right to the property in question. Held that the status of the plaintiff as widow of H was not res judicata. The question of the plaintiff's marriage with H had not been controverted before the arbitrators and finally decided in a manner sufficient to establish res judicata. An award can only operate as an estoppel in respect of questions properly brought before and considered by the arbitrators. Expl. III of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) does not apply where the Court is silent on a head of relief only claimed as ancillary to the main relief, and which by implication is rather granted than refused. It only applies where the Court is silent on an independent head of relief claimed and duly controverted. But held that the award and release contained in the decree constituted a binding agreement, by which the plaintiff F for the sum of Rs55,000 waived all her rights against A, including the claim made in the present suit, which existed at the time of the award as a present right dependent on a contingency, and the suit therefore should be dismissed. FATMABAI v. Held on appeal, affirming the decision of SCOTT, J., that the present suit was not barred under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) by reason of the former suit No. 227 of 1882. Although F litigated in the former suit as widow of H as she did in the present suit, the matters "substantially in issue" in the two suits were quite distinct. In the former suit she claimed her share in the estate of H as one of his lawful heirs entitled to succeed to him on his death. In the present suit her claim was based on a subsequent event, by reason of which she contended that A's share was by law and custom forfeited, and reverted to the estate of H. Held also (affirming the decision of SCOTT, J.) that the status of plaintiff as widow of H was not res judicata. The plaintiff in suit No. 227 of 1882, no doubt, asked for a declaration that she was the widow of H, and no such declaration had been made. But the declaration was not sought for by way of specific relief, but simply as the ground for the real and substantial relief to obtain which the suit was instituted, viz., the payment by A of F's share of H's estate. Expl. III of s. 13 was not intended to apply to such a case. Held (reversing the decision of SCOTT, J.) that the declaration in the former decree, that the Rs55,000 were paid to the plaintiff in full settlement of all her claims upon the estate, did not bar the present suit. The words of the award and decree were to be read with reference to the character in which the parties were litigating as widows of the deceased H claiming to succeed to his property on his death. Such general language was to be controlled by the circumstances of the case. Upon the proper construction of the award there was no such clear intention shown to include in the settlement a contingent claim of the special nature now made as to

A consent decree of 1873 decided that alluvial land belonged to the plaintiff's village Sipah. The area was judicially determined in 1876 on a map of 1874, but actual possession was not obtained from the defendant, who owned villages on the opposite side of the river. The decree-holder in 1877 included a claim for part of the same land in a suit for an accretion to another of his riparian villages, Khasapur, and the latter suit was wholly dismissed. To get possession of the land decreed in 1873, he then brought rent-suits against two tenants upon it, the defendant intervening under s. 111 of the Oudh Rent Act, 1868. Both the rent-suits were dismissed; and according to the right reserved in the latter section the plaintiff, to establish his title in a competent Court, brought the present suit, including in it the land which he had made part of his claim in the dismissed suit of 1877. Held, on the question whether the dismissal of the suit of 1877 precluded a further suit for that part of the land which had been included in it, that it did not, and that s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code was inapplicable. The pleadings and judgment in the suit of 1877 were referred to, showing that what belonged to Sipah had not been in issue, and that nothing respecting it had been heard or decided. Held also, as to the rest of the land claimed in this suit, that there was no bar on account of its omission from the suit of 1877. As to meine profits, it would have been open to the High Court to direct an enquiry under s. 212 of the Civil Procedure Code. JAGATJIT SINGH v. SARABJIT SINGH I. L. R., 19 Calc., 167

In pursuance of that decree, which was made in 1855, the land had been, according to the evidence, taken by the defendants. In whose possession it was in 1868; from which date till 1883, when the present suit was brought, that land had been treated, alike by the Government authorities and by the defendants, as belonging to the latter. Had the question been one of limitation, the possession of the defendants for a period of twelve years would not have been sufficient to exclude this claim by the plaintiff, the Government, to recover whatever could have been shown to be its property. The question, however, was not one of limitation; and the fact of the possession having been retained for so long a period was used by the defendants, not to make a title, but to define or identify the land which the decree of 1865 had awarded to them. Although the specification of the boundaries (which had been merely by reference to the plaintiff which mentioned adjoining villages) had been ineffectual, the acts of the parties had been such as to fix the meaning of the terms used; and it was established by the evidence that the land now claimed was identical with that which had been made over under the decree of 1865, to which it related. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. 352. ——— Transfer of interest—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13—Appointment of a creditor as agent to collect rents and appropriate part towards the debt.—In a suit to redeem a kanom on certain land, the jenm of a devasom in Malabar, it appeared that the plaintiff held a melkanom in respect of the same land executed to him (subsequently to the date of the kanom sought to be redeemed), by defendant 3, the samudayam of the devasom. Defendant 3 represented one C, in whose favour the uralers had in 1741 executed a document appointing him samudayam and stating that they had received from him a kanom of 18,000 fanams on the devasom properties, and providing that he should appropriate part of the rents towards the loan. It appeared that in a suit to eject tenants, the uralers had sued as co-plaintiffs with the samudayam; in subsequent suits, however, two of the uralers had sued other tenants for rent and the samudayam for an account; both of these suits were dismissed on second appeal, and in the judgments of the High Court the samudayam was described as a mortgagee in possession. Held, (1) on its appearing that no opinion was expressed in the former suits as to the construction of the document of 1741, that the former decisions had not the force of res judicata; (2) in view of the conduct of the parties and on the terms of the document of 1741, that the samudayam was not thereby constituted a mortgagee in possession, and that the melkanom set up by the plaintiff was invalid. KRISHNAK v. 353. ——— Creditor of a devasom placed in possession as samudayam—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13.—In a suit brought by the uralers of a devasom in Malabar to recover certain land in the possession of the defendant it appeared that the defendant held under an instrument, dated 1741, whereby his predecessor in title was appointed samudayam, and was authorized to appropriate part of the rents of the devasom properties to the interest on a loan made by him to the uralers. Two of these uralers had brought a previous suit against the defendant for an account of the rents received by him and for an injunction; that suit was dismissed on second appeal when the High Court described the defendant as a mortgagee in possession, but the question whether or not he was a mortgagee with or without possession was not then directly and substantially in issue. Held that the status of the defendant was not res judicata by reason of the judgment in the previous suit. RAMAN V. 354. ——— Matter which should have been ground of attack in former suit—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 13, 43.—The widow daughter and divided brother of a deceased Hindu executed an instrument which provided for the distribution of his property, both moveable and immovable, as to which they had disputed. The document was not registered. The widow set up a will made by the deceased in her favour; the brother sued the widow for a declaration that the will was a forgery, but the Court held that it was genuine. He now sued the widow and daughter on the above instrument to recover his agreed share of the moveable property of the deceased. The widow set up the will, which the plaintiff averred was invalid according to the custom governing the family. Held that the plaintiff was not precluded by the decree in the former suit from impugning the validity of the will. THANDAVAN v. VALLIAMMA . I. L. R., 15 Mad., 336

355. ——— Question as to whether decree is binding—Decree amended after execution to conform with judgment—Decision in suit to set aside sale under amended decree.—In a suit for money against the karnavan and two anandravans of a Malabar tarwad, the judgment directed a "decree for the plaintiffs as prayed," but the decree ordered payment by one anandravan only. Property of the tarwad was attached and sold. The decree was then amended and brought into conformity with the judgment. Other members of the tarwad sought to have the sale set aside, but it was found that the judgment-debt had been contracted for proper tarwad purposes, and that suit was dismissed. Application was now made for the attachment of other property of the tarwad in further execution of the amended decree. Held that the members of the tarwad were not entitled to contend that the decree was not binding on them, that matter being res judicata. CHATHAPPAN v. 356. ——— Usufructuary mortgage—Suit by mortgagee for possession—Decree for possession—Subsequent suit by mortgagor for redemption.—In 1864 the lands in dispute were mortgaged under an agreement that the mortgagee should hold the lands and apply the profits towards the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. In 1869, the mortgagor having obstructed the mortgagee, the latter filed a suit for removal of the obstruction and for confirmation of his possession. He obtained a decree ordering that he should retain possession till the debt was paid off from the usufruct. In 1885 the mortgagor filed a suit for redemption. The defence to this suit was that it was barred by the decree in the former suit. Held that the suit was not so barred, the relative rights of mortgagor and mortgagee not having been adjudicated upon in the former suit. NARSINHA MANOHAR v. BHAGYANTRAY

357. ——— Suit by purchaser against mortgagee for possession—Issue raised by mortgagor impeaching bond fides of sale—Decree for plaintiff without recording finding on issue—Subsequent suit for redemption by mortgagor against mortgagees impeaching sale as fraudulent and void.—In 1874 the plaintiff mortgaged certain property to R D and E L. In 1877 the mortgagees sold it by auction to one K, who in the following year sued the mortgagor for possession. The defendants in that suit filed a written statement impeaching K's title under the alleged sale, and at the hearing an issue was raised as to whether the plaintiff (K) was the purchaser of the premises bond fide and for valuable consideration. The plaintiff (K) obtained a decree in that suit, but no finding on the said issue was recorded. The plaintiff in the present case was the son of the mortgagee, and he now sued to redeem the property and for a declaration that the alleged sale by the mortgagees was fraudulent and void as against him. He contended that in the former suit he did not intend to allege that the sale was not bond fide, but merely that it took place without due notice and was impeachable on that ground, and he relied on the fact that there had been no finding on the issue. Held that the present suit was barred by the issue and decree in the former suit. In that suit the plaintiff (K) had given evidence that he was the bond fide purchaser of the property. Though no actual finding on that issue was recorded, the decree passed for the plaintiff necessarily involved the finding of the issue in the affirmative. RAMKRISHNA JAGANNATH v. VITHAL RAMJI

358. ——— Cross-appeals heard separately—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13—The plaintiff and defendant in a suit each appealed separately and defendant's appeal first came on for hearing, and an issue as to whether the plaintiff or the defendant had title to the land in dispute was decided on the facts by the Appellate Court adversely to the defendant. Subsequently, the plaintiff's appeal, involving the same issue, came on for hearing before the same Court. Held that, although s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply, still the principle of res judicata applied, and the finding on the former appeal barred the trial of the same issue in the latter. Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari, I. L. R., 6 All., 269 : L. R., 11 I. A., 37, referred to. RAM LAL v. CHHEB NATH . I. L. R., 12 All., 578 apparently not being a finding on any material issue in the suit, that the defendants were entitled to certain rights in respect of the property decreed to the plaintiff. No application was made to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment, and the decree as it stood was affirmed on appeal. Held that the defendants, as plaintiffs in a subsequent suit between the same parties relating to the same property, could not plead the finding in their favour in the judgment as constituting res judicata in the face of the clear wording of the decree. *INDARJIT PRASAD v. 361. ———— Contentions not raised by way of defence in former suit—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 13, 43.—In a suit to recover possession of the impartible zamindari of Sivaganga, it appeared that the istimrar zamindar died in 1829, and that after an interval of wrongful possession by his brother and his descendants, his daughter established her title to succeed him and was placed in possession in 1864. She died in 1877, leaving the present plaintiff, her son, and three daughters her surviving. A suit was then brought by the father of the present defendant, who was the son of her elder sister (deceased), against the present plaintiff and the daughters of the late Rani for possession of the zamindari, to which he claimed to be entitled by right of inheritance. A decree was passed for the plaintiff in that suit, under which he obtained possession of the zamindari and retained it until his death in 1883, when he was succeeded by the present defendant. The plaintiff now sued as above, claiming that the right to the zamindari had devolved on him, and not on the defendant, on the death of the plaintiff in the former suit. Held (1) that the defendant's father had not succeeded to a qualified heritage nor to a mere right of management of joint family property in which the plaintiff had a right of survivorship, but that he had succeeded to the estate as full owner and had therefore become a fresh stock of descent; (2) that accordingly nearness or remoteness of relationship to the istimrar zamindar was immaterial, and the defendant's right of succession was not affected by the fact that the whole class of the istimrar zamindar's daughters' sons had not been exhausted. Held also that the plaintiff was not precluded from raising the contentions to which the above rulings relate by reason of their not having been raised by way of defence to the suit brought against him by the defendant's father. *MUTTUADUGANATHA TEVAR v. Z obtained a decree against A and B, on which about Rs. 4,400 was due, and in execution attached the first-mentioned decree. A and B first alleged in the matter of the execution of their decree for the first time that the suit against them had been instituted really by X, though in the name of his son Z, and consequently contended that the decree amount, which they paid into Court, was the property of X and so liable to satisfy their claim. The above allegation was substantiated, and Z's claim on the money in Court was disallowed on appeal. Held (1) that A and B were not precluded from asserting their claim to the money in Court by reason of the above allegation not having been made by way of defence to the suit of Z; (2) that A and B were entitled to enforce any claim, which X might enforce, for the purpose of satisfying their decree, and accordingly that Z's claim on the money in Court was rightly disallowed. *ATCHAYYA v. 363. ———— Question substantially in issue in former suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. 2—Reversioner.—A widow purported to charge land which she held for her widow's estate with payment of a debt, and afterwards surrendered her estate to the next heir, or reversioner, on condition that he should pay all her debts, and a suit was brought by the creditor after the death of the widow against the reversioner to recover the debt. This suit had been preceded by another one brought by the creditor against both the widow, then alive, and the reversioner, the cause of action against the latter being that in his hands was the property chargeable. That suit was dismissed as against him, but decreed against the widow. In the present suit payment was claimed from him of a balance of the deceased widow's debt, on the ground that he had agreed, on taking the surrender of the estate from her, to become responsible for her debts. Held that this "might and ought to have been made ground of attack" in the former suit within the expl. 2 of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, and must accordingly be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and therefore that this suit was barred. 364. ———— Matter which might have been a ground of defence in a former suit—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13, expl. 2.—A defendant in a suit for the recovery of possession of immovable property pleaded only a right to the proprietary possession of the property in suit in himself. This defence failed, and a decree was given in favour of the plaintiff. Subsequently the plaintiff sold a portion of the property so decreed to them, and the quodam defendant brought a suit for pre-emption. Held that the suit must fail, inasmuch as the plaintiff's claim was one which he might have made when defendant in the former suit as an alternative to his defence of title. *Mootoo Vijaya, etc. v. 365. ———— Unnecessary issue—Finding on an unnecessary issue inserted in decree—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13.—The plaintiff attached certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him against one J, the widow of one R. The defendant G intervened and claimed the house as having been purchased by him from one S, to whom, he alleged, J had sold it before the date of the decree against her. The plaintiff's attachment was removed, and the plaintiff thereupon brought a suit (No. 670 of 1886) to establish his right to sell the house in execution. The Court found that the house was not J's and dismissed the suit on that ground, but it also recorded a finding that the sales set up by the defendant were fraudulent and collusive. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a decree against M, the son of R, and in execution again attached the house. The defendant again intervened, alleging that the house was his, and the attachment was removed. Thereupon the plaintiff filed this suit to establish his right to sell in execution. The defendant again pleaded that he was owner of the house by reason of the sales set up by him in the former suit. It was argued that these sales had been proved to be collusive and fraudulent in an issue raised in that suit, and that the defence in the present suit was therefore res judicata. Held that the defence was not res judicata. The former suit had been decided on the finding that the property in question was not J's. The finding in that suit on the issue as to the sales to the defendant was not necessary for the determination of the suit. Where an issue is not necessary for the decision of the suit in which it is raised, the decree couched in general terms does not cover the finding on that issue, nor can the insertion of such finding in the decree give it the force of res judicata. The Civil Procedure Code does not contemplate findings on issues being inserted in it (see ss. 2 and 6 and sch. IV), and there is no section in the Code which makes it necessary to

366. ———— Finding in judgment not embodied in decree and not essential to the making of the decrees as framed—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13.—A finding in a judgment to operate as res judicata, the Court being a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit, must be material and necessary to support the precise and particular ground or grounds on which the decree or some operative part of it was made, otherwise the finding must be considered either as superseded by the decree, or as entirely immaterial, or as no more than incidental and subsidiary to the main question in the suit, although in the latter case the finding may have been necessary to the decision of the suit. The finding of fact to operate as res judicata need not have been the sole finding of fact upon which the decree was made, but it must have been a material and necessary finding of fact, material and necessary in the sense that the fact must have been found as it was found in the judgment, and could not have been found otherwise, for the decree as it was made to have been a good result in law from the fact or facts so found. Further, if there were two findings of fact either of which would justify in law the making of the decree which was made, that one of such two findings of fact which should in the logical sequence of necessary issues have been first found, and the finding of which would have rendered the other of such two findings unnecessary for the making of the decree which was made, is the finding which can operate as res judicata. A matter cannot be said to be "directly and substantially in issue" within the meaning of the first paragraph of s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882 unless and until it is, or becomes, material for the decision of the suit to find as to it. The framing of issues under s. 146 of Act XIV of 1882, on which at that stage of the suit the right decision of the case appears to depend, does not of itself make the matter to which such issues relate "directly and substantially in issue" within the meaning of s. 13, although, when the finding upon any one or more of the issues is sufficient for the decision of the suit, it may be desirable that the Court should state in its judgment its finding or decision upon each separate issue which it had framed. Act III of 1864)*, s. 363.—In a suit brought by one A against C for damages for not removing certain offensive matter from his land, the questions raised were, whether there was notice, and whether the defendant was bound to remove the filth from the plaintiff's property. The Court having found that there was no notice, which in its opinion was a ground sufficient for dismissal of the suit under s. 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act and also upon the merits, having come to the conclusion that the defendant was not bound to remove the offensive matter from the plaintiff's land, dismissed the suit. In a subsequent suit between the same parties, the plaintiff claiming the same relief as in the previous suit, the defence was that the suit was barred as res judicata. Held that, inasmuch as the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, and as it was finally heard and decided between the same parties, notwithstanding the fact that the previous suit failed by reason of the decision of the Court upon some other matter as well, the subsequent suit was barred as res judicata. *Shib Charan Lal v. It does not apply to cases where the subject-matters of the two suits are different. The plaintiffs, in the year 1881, instituted a suit for a declaration of private baradari rights in connection with the daily receipts and offerings at a certain Mahomedan place of worship, alleging that the defendants had dispossessed them on the 27th September 1881; but they did not assert any claim as khadims. The suit was decreed, but the decree was reversed on appeal. On the 7th March 1892, the plaintiffs instituted a suit for a declaration that they were the khadims of a certain durga and, as such, entitled to perform the duties attached to that office for 21 days in each month, and during that period to receive the offerings made by worshippers at the durga. They also claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with them in the exercise of that office. The plaintiffs claimed their khadimi rights partly by inheritance and partly by purchase, a custom of transferability by sale having been long recognized. 369. — Suit for rent—Code of Civil Procedure (1882), s. 13—Landlord and tenant—Question of title incidentally raised in a previous suit—Subsequent suit for declaration of title to land purchased.—A suit was brought by A against B and others for rent; and the matter directly and substantially in issue was as to what the share was for which A was entitled to rent. The plaintiff obtained a decree for the whole rent. In a subsequent suit by B and others against A for declaration of title to land purchased by them in execution of their mortgage decree, the defence was that the former decree for rent operated as res judicata. Held that, as the issue in the rent suit was for what share the plaintiff was entitled to rent, and not to what share of the property was the plaintiff entitled as owner, the question of title could be said to have been in issue in that suit only incidentally and not directly, and it could not have been entertained in the form in which it was now raised; therefore the subsequent suit was not barred as res judicata. *Ram Bahader Singh v. In 1882 the minor sued by his next friend to have the consent decree set aside on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud practised on the guardian ad litem. That suit was dismissed. In 1884 an application was unsuccessfully made in the original suit objecting that the compromise had been entered into without the sanction of the Court. The minor, having attained majority, now sued to have the consent decree set aside on the ground that it had not been sanctioned by the Court under Civil Procedure Code, s. 462. Held that the suit was barred by the decree in the suit of 1882 for the reason that the want of sanction might and ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit. ABUNACHALAM CHETTY v. 375. — Right to a temple office and its endowments—Issue as to adverse possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. 2.—Certain offices in a temple and the endowments attached thereto were held jointly by the members of two branches of a family, represented respectively by the plaintiff and the defendant. Long previously to 1872, the defendant's branch got into sole possession, and in that year a family settlement was arrived at by which it was arranged that the offices should be held in rotation and the lands in equal shares; and, in accordance with this settlement, a certain village forming part of the endowment was delivered to the plaintiff's branch of the family. In 1889 the defendant brought a suit to recover a moiety of that village, and an issue was raised whether he enjoyed the offices and the landed property in his independent right or as a servant for wages. His suit was dismissed on the ground that the offices and emoluments were indivisible and went by right to the older branch of the family. The plaintiff now sued in 1895 to establish his right to the entire offices and to recover possession of the other village. Held that it was open to the defendant to assert in this suit a title by adverse possession as that had been made a ground of attack, though not the basis of his claim in the former suit. ALAGIRISAMI NAICKAR v. 376. ——— Suits by different partners for specific sums of money on adjustment of accounts—Partnership—Accounts adjusted by Ameen appointed in previous suits—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13, expts. 2 and 3, and s. 43—Contract Act, s. 265.—After dissolution of a certain partnership, two separate suits were brought in 1839 by different partners for specific sums of money due to them, and, in the alternative, for such other amount as might be found due on an adjustment of accounts. Objections were raised against these suits on the grounds, inter alia, (1) that the suits were barred by the provisions of s. 265 of the Indian Contract Act; (2) that separate suits for the same matter were not maintainable; (3) that the suits would not lie in the Munsif's Court; and (4) that, accounts having been already adjusted, there was no cause of action. The Munsif overruled the first three objections, and held, as regards the fourth, that the adjustment pleaded had been ratified by the plaintiffs; he appointed an Ameen, who examined the accounts and ascertained the respective claims of the partners, and the plaintiffs in those suits obtained decrees on the basis of the Ameen's adjustment of account. The present suits were brought in 1891 by certain other partners, who were defendants in the suits of 1839, on the allegation that the partnership account had been already adjusted by the Ameen appointed in the suits of 1839, and that the debts and dues of all parties had been determined by the Court. The plaintiffs prayed for recovery of the amount due to them under the Ameen's adjustment, and, in the alternative, for such other relief as might be deemed proper by the Court to grant them against any of the defendants. Held by NOBIS and BAKERJEE, J.J. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting).—That neither s. 13 nor s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code was a bar to the present suits, the issue now in suit not having been determined in the former suits. Held by RAMPINI, J.—That there was ground for contending that, under expts. 2 and 3 to s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, the present suits were barred. It appeared that the land had been the subject of a kanom demise in 1866, and that defendant No. 3, the then karnavan, had obtained in 1878 a decree for its redemption, the right to execute which he assigned to a stranger, who executed it, and took possession of the property, taking from the karnavan a new kanom deed. Subsequently defendants Nos. 4 and 5 obtained a decree for possession and the cancellation of both the assignment and the kanom deed; but this decree was attached in execution proceedings in another suit and purchased by defendant No. 1, who executed it, purchased the property, deposited the kanom amount, and took possession on the 8th March 1884. The plaintiffs, who had meanwhile taken abortive proceedings to defeat the first defendant's title, instituted a suit in August 1884, praying for a decree that the sale to him be set aside without praying for possession. It was now found that the plaintiffs at that time were not aware that defendant No. 1 was in possession, and he did not plead that fact as a defence to the suit for a declaration merely. Held that the plaintiffs were not affected by constructive notice of the defendant's possession in 1884 by reason of the fact that their karnavan, with whom they were not acting, was aware of the defendant's previous application for execution, and that the suit was not barred by the Civil Procedure Code, s. 43. Semble—That apart from the question of the plaintiffs' notice of the first defendant's possession, since he had not pleaded possession in the suit of 1884, he could not fall back upon the fact that his possession dated from March 1884, as a ground of defence to the present action. (a), (c), and (d) of the section. Though cl. (b) does authorize the Court to determine the name and description of the tenant, this was not intended to and does not authorize the Court to decide conclusively disputes as to the right to possession of the land. An issue therefore regarding a dispute as to the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties in a proceeding under s. 158 can only be decided collaterally, and does not arise between the parties in such a manner as to make the decision upon it res judicata between them in a subsequent regular suit. *Bhupendra Narayan Dutt v. 383. Judgment in rem—Decree obtained by fraud—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13—Evidence Act, s. 44.—Where a decree in a suit has been honestly obtained without fraud, it cannot be subsequently disputed by the parties thereto or their privies, or by persons who were represented by such parties. Strangers to the suit (i.e., persons neither privies to, nor represented by, the parties thereto) are not bound by such a decree if it be a decree inter partes; but if it be a decree in rem and passed by a competent court, they are bound by it and cannot controvert it. Where a decree has been obtained by means of the fraud of one party against the other, it is binding on parties and privies, and on persons represented by the parties, so long as it remains in force, but it may be impeached for fraud, and may be set aside if the fraud is proved. In the case of judgments in rem the same rule holds good with regard to persons who are strangers to the suit. Where a decree has been obtained by the fraud and collusion of both the parties to the suit, it is binding upon the parties. It is also binding upon the privies of the parties,—except, probably, where the collusive fraud has been on a provision of the law enacted for the benefit of such privies. 384. Decree against Hindu widow—Fraud—Reversioner.—Upon the death of E, a Hindu, who was separate from his brother S, his widow G became life-tenant of his estate, and his daughter B became entitled to succeed after G's death. In 1882 a suit was brought by S and G against V to recover the value of a branch of a mango tree wrongfully taken by the defendant, and for maintenance of possession over the grove in which the tree was situate. The suit was dismissed, and it was decided that E was not the owner of the grove, nor was G the owner. In 1885 B brought a suit against G, S, V, and A, to whom V had sold some of the trees, claiming a declaration of her right and possession of the grove, upon the allegation that the proceedings of 1882 were carried on in collusion between S and G on the one hand and V on the other, for the purpose of improperly preventing her from asserting her rights. Held that, if the suit of 1882 was a genuine suit and was properly contested by the then plaintiffs, though S might have been improperly joined as plaintiff, any decision then passed against G would be binding upon the present plaintiff, and estop her again litigating questions which were then decided. Held also that, if the plaintiff's specific allegation of fraud and collusion in the proceedings of 1882 were established, and even if the decree of 1882 did dispose of the question now sought to be re-opened, the decision in that suit would not be binding on the plaintiff under the circumstances. Katama Nat-chiar's case, 9 *Moore's I. Decree in suit by Hindu widow—Reversioners, Suit by—Alienation by life-tenant—Adverse possession.—

A daughter succeeded to a share of her father's estate, and transferred it in full property by a formal instrument or ikrarnama, dated March 1849, to her granddaughter, expressly naming her and treating her as her heiress, —the transfer being in the nature of a release, reserving maintenance and other advantages to the donor. Upon the application of the granddaughter before the Collector for the mutation of names according to the terms of the ikrarnama, the reversioners (collateral heirs of the father) affected to contest the unauthorized nature of the alienation, but dropped their opposition. In 1857 the diaras, or alluvial lands attached to the estate, were perpetually settled with the granddaughter. The alienor quarrelled with her granddaughter, and in 1857 brought a suit against her to set aside the ikrarnama, upon the ground of the non-performance of a condition subsequent. The plaintiff succeeded in the first Court, but the judgment was reversed (October 1858) on appeal to the Zillah Judge. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff died (February 1858), and reversioners applied to be, and were, admitted as her heirs to conduct the appeal. The granddaughter remained in possession from the date of transfer until 1866, when she died. In April 1867 the present suit was brought by the surviving reversioner, who claimed to be entitled to recover possession of the property by right of inheritance from the alienor's father. He was one of the reversioners who had been admitted to conduct the appeal in the former suit upon the death of the alienor. Held (on special appeal and review) there had been no adverse possession; the instrument enured as a transfer of the donor's life-interest only; the judgment in the former suit brought to set it aside did not bind or affect the reversioners, who in that suit merely represented the interest of their predecessors, the life-tenant. RAJ KUNWAR v. Decree in suit by manager of joint family—Manager of joint family as representative of other members—Subsequent suit by another member on same cause of action.—

A Hindu family is regarded as a corporation whose interests are necessarily centred in the manager, the presumption being that the manager is acting for the family, unless the contrary is shown. Before the introduction of the Civil Procedure Code, this was so equally with regard to litigation as to other transactions, and it was not then obligatory, or even customary, for a Hindu manager to set forth that he sued in a representative character (as now required by the Code, s. 50), or to add the co-owners as parties to the suit (as required by English law). A suit therefore brought in 1856 by the manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and the plaintiff, and no fraud or collusion being alleged, bound the plaintiff, though then a minor, and he could not afterwards bring a second suit on the same cause of action. GAN SAVANT BAL SAVANT v. He had been dispossessed by the defendants under a decree declaring their title to the land against the plaintiff's elder brother, who claimed it on behalf of the Vadasheri illam. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped by the former decree from recovering the land. Per INNES, J.—The question whether a decree obtained against the karnavan of a Nayar tarwad or of a Nambudri illam in Malabar is binding on the family is purely one of procedure. The dictum in Varanakot Narayanam Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanam Namburi, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 328, that in the absence of fraud or collusion a decree against the karnavan, as such, is binding on the anandravans of the tarwad, is not warranted by any provision of the Code of Civil Procedure. Every member of the tarwad is entitled to be made a party, or to have notice under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in any suit the object of which is to affect the tarwad property. Expl. 5 of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not refer to bona fide defences, but to bona fide claims, and does not make a decree binding on a person not a party to it where the actual defendant was jointly interested with such person in the subject-matter of the suit and defended the suit bona fide. *Hazir Gazi v. His right to the wall was denied, but he obtained a decree. On executing the decree, he was resisted by the defendant, who claimed the wall as his ancestral property, and alleged that he was no party to the suit in which the decree had been obtained against his father and brother. His claim was registered as a suit under s. 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff contended that the defendant was concluded by the decree obtained against the father and brother. Held that a Hindu son in a joint family becomes entitled by reason of his birth and in his own right, a right which he can enforce against his father; he does not claim under his father within the meaning of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. Five days after the execution of the deed of gift, the property was sold in execution for the decree of the attaching creditor C, and was purchased by C at such sale. Ten days after the sale, A instituted proceedings under s. 256 of Act VIII of 1859 to set it aside on the ground of irregularity. These proceedings were afterwards continued in the name of A, but virtually on behalf of the minor B, under the control and direction of the Collector, who had taken charge of his estate, and appointed a manager under Act XL of 1858. 402. ———— Decision as to validity of will.—S died in 1865, leaving two sons, N and G. M took possession of the property of S under a will alleged by her to have been executed by S. In 1867 G brought his suit, as one of the heirs of S, to set aside the will, and made his brother N a co-defendant. The Principal Sudder Ameen dismissed the suit, finding on the evidence that the will was genuine. In 1869 N brought this suit for his share as heir of S against M. The first Court found that the will was a forgery, and gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the Judge held that N's claim was barred by the decision in the former suit brought by his brother, and reversed the decision of the first Court. Held, on special appeal, that it was not barred by the finding of the Court in G's suit, as N was no party to that suit, and he could not in any manner have availed himself of a decree in that suit to enforce a claim to his share. NABIN CHANDRA MAZUMDAR v. On refusal to give his brothers their shares of the profits, they sued separately and obtained decrees against him for the amount due to them. In a suit by A's son against B for the sums which his father was compelled under the ikrar to pay his other brothers, on the allegation that B alone was in possession of talukh N and appropriated the rents wrongfully,—Held that the suit was not barred by the former suits under the ikrar, except so far as B's share in talukh N was concerned. KHETTRO NATH DEY v. In a former suit, to which all the present mirasidars were parties, either actually or as privies to those through whom they claim, it was decided that no right existed in any individual shareholder of the village to have allowed to him a distinct portion of the common lands in proportion to his share or shares. Held that the former decree

405. ————— Decree in suit to establish right—Subsequent suit for possession—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Suit between same parties.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain houses and grounds as belonging to his zamindari, setting forth that the premises in question had been occupied by his paternal grandmother, on whose death the defendants had taken wrongful possession. The defendants claimed to be legally entitled to the premises in question, and contended that the plaintiff's suit was barred under s. 2, Act VIII of 1859, by reason that the plaintiff had already, during his grandmother's lifetime, brought a suit against her and the defendant's father, as a co-defendant, to establish his right to the same premises, which suit had been dismissed. The defendants also pleaded limitation. It appeared that in the former suit the relief sought by the plaintiff was substantially to restrain his grandmother from acts of waste in alienating property which had belonged to her deceased husband by assigning it to her co-defendant; but that, as regards the property now claimed, although it was mentioned in the plaint, no charge had been made that she had assigned it, or intended to assign it, to her co-defendant, nor any allegation to show that the co-defendant had any interest in it. Held, reversing the decisions of the lower Court, that under the circumstances the decision in the former suit was not a decision in a suit between the same parties, or parties under whom they claimed, and that the cause of action in the present suit was not determined in the former suit. Held also that the defendant's plea of limitation could not be determined without a finding as to whether the plaintiff's grandmother, who died within the period of limitation, had held the premises with the plaintiff's leave, or as a trespasser. *ZAMINDAR OF PITTAPURAM v. 406. ————— Decree in suit by first mortgagee for sale of mortgaged property—Second mortgagee not made a party—Subsequent suit by second mortgagee on mortgage—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 13—Meaning of "between parties under whom they or any of them claim."—Upon the death of G, a Mahomedan, his estate was divisible into eight shares, two of which devolved upon his son, A, one upon each of his five daughters, and one upon his widow, B. The name of B only was recorded in the revenue registers in respect of the zamindari property left by G. In 1876 A and B gave to X a deed of simple mortgage of 2½ biswas out of a 5-biswas share of a village included in the said property.

In 1878 A and B gave to S a deed of simple mortgage of the 5 biswas, which were described in the deed as the widow's "own" property. In 1882 X obtained a decree upon his mortgage for the sale of the mortgaged property, and it was put up for sale and purchased by X himself in January 1884. In February and November 1884 the daughters of G obtained ex-parte decrees against A and B in suits brought by them to recover their shares by inheritance in the 5 biswas. In 1885 S brought a suit upon his mortgage of 1878, claiming the amount due thereon and the sale of the whole 5 biswas. To this suit he made defendants A and B, G's daughters, and X, alleging that the decrees of February and November 1884 were fraudulently and collusively obtained; and as to the auction sale of January 1884, that the 2½ biswas were sold subject to his mortgage, he not having been made a party to the suit brought by X upon the deed of 1876, and therefore not being bound by any of the proceedings taken therein or consequent thereto. On behalf of the daughters it was contended (inter alia) that the decrees obtained by them against A and B in February 1884 were conclusive, by way of res judicata, against the plaintiff, who, as mortgagee from A and B, claimed under a title derived from them. Held that, there being no evidence to show that the decrees of February and November 1884 were fraudulently and collusively obtained, the Court of first instance was right in exempting the shares of the daughters from the lien sought to be enforced by the plaintiff; and that, inasmuch as the deed of 1876 was prior in date to the plaintiff's deed of 1878, and there was no allegation of fraud or collusion in regard to it, the decree and sale in enforcement of the former deed would defeat the rights of the plaintiff under the latter. Khush Chand v. Kalian Das, I. L. R., 1 All., 240, and Ali Hasan v. Dhirja, I. L. R., 4 All., 518, referred to. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The decrees of February and November 1884 did not operate as res judicata against the plaintiff, inasmuch as a mortgagee cannot be bound by a decision relating to the mortgaged property in a suit instituted after his mortgage, and to which he was not a party. After a mortgage has been duly created, the mortgagor, in whom the equity of redemption is vested, no longer possesses any such estate as would entitle him to represent the rights and interests of the mortgagee in a subsequent litigation, so as to render the result of such litigation binding upon and conclusive against such mortgagee. The plaintiff in the present suit could not be treated as a party claiming under his mortgagors within the meaning of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that section must be interpreted as if, after the words "under whom they or any of them claim," the words "by a title arising subsequently to the commencement of the former suit" had been inserted. *Duma Sahu v. 407. — Illegitimacy, Question of — Execution of decrees—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11.—The questions which, under s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, may be determined by a Court executing a decree, must be between parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and must relate to the execution of the decree. A person who was not on the record when the decree was made does not constitute himself a party to the suit by applying for execution, and a question as to his legitimacy is consequently not one which the Court executing the decree is competent to entertain. A declaration by a Court in execution proceedings, that a person not a party to the suit applying for execution is legitimate, since it is made without jurisdiction, cannot, under s. 2, Act VIII of 1859, be pleaded as a bar to a regular suit in which it is sought to establish the illegitimacy of the applicant. *ABIDUNNISA KHATUN v. 408. — Suits in right of inheritance.—M, in 1866, brought a suit against A, her son S, B, and C, who, like her, all claimed a right to inherit the estate of K, deceased, for her share by inheritance in K's estate, alleging that she had been lawfully married to him. She only denied A's right to inherit, who claimed as K's adopted son; admitting the right of S, who claimed as her lawful son by K, and that of B and C, who claimed as wife and daughter respectively of K. S supported his mother's claim. A, B, and C denied that M had been lawfully married to K, and alleged that S was the son of M, not by K, but by another person. It was decided in that suit that M had been lawfully married to K; that S was the lawful son of K by M, and that A was not the adopted son of K. In 1870 S sued A for possession of C's share in such estate, C having died, claiming as C's step brother and heir. A set up as a defence that M was not K's wife, nor was S K's son. Held that, inasmuch as, although in the former suit A and S stood together in the same array, they were in fact opposed to each other, S being on the side and supporting the case of his mother, and A being the true defendant, such suit was one between the same parties as the second, and the matter of S's legitimacy, having been raised and finally decided in the former suit by a competent Court, was res judicata, and could not be again raised in the second suit. *SHADAL KHAN v. A then applied that the suit should be revived against B as the representative of the defendant. B denied that he was such representative, but the Judge refused to go into the question, made B a party, and gave A a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. B subsequently brought a suit to have it declared, inter alia, that the mortgage and decree only covered the widow's life-interest. Held that the suit was not barred either as res judicata or under the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. KANAI LALL KHAN v. SASHI BHUSON BISWAS

410. — Mortgage—Purchaser of mortgagor's interest—Sale in execution of decrees—Omission to revive suit.—A mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage against his mortgagor and against A, a person who had purchased the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor in execution of a money-decree obtained against him subsequently to the mortgage. Pending the mortgage-suit and before decree, A died, but the suit was not revived against his representatives. The usual mortgage-decree was passed in favour of the mortgagee, who, in execution thereof, sold a portion of the mortgaged property to B. In a suit brought by B against the representatives of A for the property purchased and for general relief,—Held that the decree in the mortgage-suit was not binding on the representatives of A; nor, under the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, did the failure to revive such mortgage-suit prevent B from bringing the second suit against A's representatives. *BEPINBHARI BUN-DOPADHYA v. 414. — Purchaser from party to suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 18—Vendor and purchaser—Purchase pendente lite.—Certain persons, claiming by right of inheritance to C, sued B, N, A, K, and others for possession of certain immoveable property, and on appeal to the High Court in August 1876 their claim was decreed in full. In the course of the litigation which ended in that decree, Z purchased certain immoveable property from B, N, A, and K. Z was subsequently dispossessed of such property in execution of the decree of August 1876. He thereupon sued the holders of that decree for possession of the same, alleging that his vendors had inherited it from D; that the figures of the total of C's property given in the plaint in the former suit were erroneous; that the property now in suit was not affected by that decree; and that he had been improperly dispossessed of it. It appeared that there was, in fact, a mistake in the total of the extent of C's property as stated in the plaint in the former suit. Held that the plaintiff, having purchased pendente lite, was bound by the decree of the High Court against the persons through whom he claimed; that the claim in the former suit having been decreed in full, the property now in suit was then decreed to the present defendants; and that the claim of the plaintiff to go behind that decree could not be entertained. HUKM SINGH v. 415. — Suit by son not claiming through his father—Gift to Hindu widow—Separate property.—C, a Hindu, subject to the Mitakshara law, died leaving a widow, B, but no issue. In his lifetime he had transferred to R by gift mouzah R, a portion of his real estate.—After his death, J and P, his brothers, sued R for the possession of C's real estate, on the ground that it was ancestral property. This suit was dismissed, it being held by the Sudder Court that C's real estate was separate property, to which his widow would be entitled to succeed by inheritance. The Sudder Court determined that R had acquired mouzah R by gift from C, and that R took under the gift a life-interest in the property only. J and P having died,

R made a gift of mouzah R to her agent as a reward for his faithful services. N, the son of J, sued as the heir of his uncle C, to set aside this gift to the agent as illegal. Held that the decision in the former suit did not make the question as to the interest R took under the gift from her husband res judicata, inasmuch as N did not claim through his father when suing as heir to his uncle. RUDI NARAIN SINGH v. 416. — Representation of the estate of a Hindu talukhdar by his widow in a suit for the succession—Act I of 1869—Act XXIV of 1870, s. 25.—Issues substantially the same as those raised in the present suit, relating to the succession to a talukhdari estate, had been decided in a former suit, in which an order of Her Majesty in Council declared who had the right to succeed. Held that a claimant, whose interest was such as would vest in him only upon the death of the widow of the last talukhdar, was bound by the order so made, on the ground that he was privy to the former suit, the whole estate, for the purpose of representing it, being vested in the widow, who was a party to that suit. Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivaganga, 9 Moore's I. A., 539, referred to and followed. That order declared that a will made by the last talukhdar, whereby a power to appoint a successor in the talukhdari had been given to the widow, had been revoked, and determined the right to succeed as upon an intestacy. The person whom the widow had appointed by her will, now contending that he was not bound by the order, having been, when the former suit was instituted, a minor, without any duly appointed guardian, it was held that, whether he had, or had not, by acts after attaining full age (having been nominally a party), become estopped from setting up the above, he was, at all events, bound by the order; on the ground that the widow, holding an estate at least as large as that of the Hindu widow in her husband's property, was the full representative of the estate in the former suit; the appointment made by her being such as would operate only on her death. Held also that, although a manager of the estate had been appointed under the provisions of Act XXIV of 1870 (the Oudh Talukhdars' Relief Act), but had not been made a party to the suit, this omission did not, under s. 25, affect the validity of the decree between the parties. PERTABNARAIN SINGH v. 418. ——— Suit for confirmation of possession and declaration of title.—A brought a suit for a debt against B, obtained a decree, and attached certain land in execution. C intervened, claiming the property as his, but on the 28th March 1868 his claim was disallowed, on the ground that in two suits previously brought against C and others for possession of the same property, on the 30th December 1863, by X and Y, whose interest had, pending the suit, been purchased by B, it had been decreed that the land belonged to B. The decrees in these suits were dated 13th and 19th January 1864; they were in favour of B, and ran in his name alone. C had purchased a moiety of the property at an auction sale on the 7th March 1859; X and Y claimed under a pre-existing mortgage over the same property, the equity of redemption under which had been foreclosed. C now brought a suit against A and B for confirmation of his possession and a declaration of his title to the property. He alleged that B was his servant, and had purchased the interest of X and Y in the property benami for him; that he (C) had made the purchase with his own money in the name of B; that the suits originally brought by X and Y had really been compromised; that while the decrees of the 13th and 19th January 1864 were nominally in favour of B, they were really in his (C's) favour; and that the suit brought by X and Y had been allowed to proceed in B's name, in order that C's title might be strengthened by a decree in his favour, B being only nominally the decree-holder. C also stated that, since his purchase on 7th March 1859, he had always been in possession, and he dated his cause of action from the 28th March 1868, when his claim to the property which had been attached by A in his suit against B was disallowed. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff C. B alone appealed to the High Court. Held that C, not having been disturbed in his possession, and seeking a declaration of his title only and no relief, should have stated clearly and precisely what that title was; that as against A, who had not appealed, the decision of the Subordinate Judge was final; that as between B and C the matter was res adjudicata; that C could not go behind the decrees of the 13th and 19th January 1864 which had been passed in favour of B, and show that the purchase by B and subsequent decrees were really benami for C and in his favour. BHAWABAI SINGH v. The sister died, and after her death her husband, on behalf of himself and grandson, sued the widow to obtain the shares to which the deceased sister was entitled, and obtained a decree for payment of the same, after satisfaction of the widow's lien for dower, in certain proportions to himself and grandson. The husband's interest in the decree was subsequently confiscated by Government for having taken part with the enemy in the Mutiny. He subsequently died leaving his grandson. The widow died during the Mutiny, and her brother was put into possession of the property by the Government as her heir. The grandson now sued the widow's brother to recover his own and his grandfather's share, alleging that the lien for dower had been satisfied. Held the suit was not barred by Act VIII of 1859, s. 2. MAHOMED AMERNOODER KHAN v. 421. ——— Auction-purchaser—“Representative.”—A purchaser at an execution-sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act. A Hindu, governed by the Mitakshara School of Law, died on the 12th May 1867, leaving him surviving a widow B and a brother R, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July 1867 B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September 1867 obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed a mortgage of seven mouzabs in favour of M as guardian of D. The money was advanced and mortgage executed at the instigation of R and with his consent, and upon his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was specifically advanced for, as well as applied towards, the payment of decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August 1880 M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party-defendant as being the purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzabs included in his mortgage. On the 26th June 1882 M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzabs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree M was opposed by I, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had on the 8th November 1880 purchased five out of the seven mouzahs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against E. On the 29th February 1884 L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August 1884, M brought this suit against L, S, R, and D, and the decree-holders in the suits against E, for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity; and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage-money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S, L and S appealed, and M filed a cross-appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S, as the representative of E, was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and that, having been a party to M's first suit, the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. Held that, as S was merely a party to M's original suit as purchaser of one mouzah, and as he, subsequently to the institution of that suit, acquired E's interest in the five mouzahs, and as E was not a party to that suit, nor was his interest represented in any way, the decree was in no way binding against E, and therefore S was not barred by res judicata from setting up the interest of E in the five mouzahs so acquired by him. *LALA PARBHU LAL v. The defendant intervened in 1878, and set up a previous purchase of the house by himself from the plaintiff. The attachment was removed. The judgment-creditor brought a suit against the defendant for a declaration that the property belonged to the plaintiff, and, as such, was liable to be attached and sold in execution. At the hearing of this suit the judgment-creditor did not appear. The defendant appeared and produced a sale-deed, which the Court found proved, and dismissed the judgment-creditor's suit. The plaintiff now brought the present suit against the defendant to recover possession of the house. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the dismissal of the former suit brought by the plaintiff's judgment-creditor operated as res judicata under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Both the lower Courts disallowed the defendant's contention, holding that the suit was not barred. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court, —Held, confirming the lower Court's decree, that the dismissal of the former suit did not operate as res judicata in the

It appeared that the house had been previously attached in execution of another decree obtained by A against the same judgment-debtor and his father (since deceased); that the present plaintiff had then preferred a claim, which was allowed; that the judgment-debtor had taken no steps to have the order allowing the claim set aside; and that a suit filed by A with that object had been dismissed. Held that the plaintiff's claim was not res judicata, although she had been a party to the former proceedings, and the defendant, not having been a party to the former proceedings, was not estopped from contesting it. *GHANAMBAL v. 424. — Suit against de facto manager or trustee de jure trustees—Dismissal of such suit as barred by limitation—Subsequent suit against same defendant with sanction of Advocate General—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539.—In 1887 certain persons, alleging that they had been appointed trustees of a temple and its property by its founder Purshotam, brought a suit to evict Purshotam's son from the premises, alleging that he had been their gumasta, that they had dismissed him, and that he refused to give up the property. The High Court dismissed that suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. In 1892 the plaintiffs brought the present suit with the consent of the Advocate General, under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, against the same defendant, alleging that after Purshotam's death the defendant had entered into possession of the property and for some years had carried out the trusts created by his father Purshotam; but that latterly he had claimed the property as his own and refused to perform the trusts. They prayed that trustees might be appointed and the property made over to such trustees. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs in both the suits were the same, vis., persons representing the same cestui que trustent, i.e., the devotees of the temple or the general public; that they sued in the same right, and as the plaintiffs in the former suit were held barred by limitation, the plaintiffs in the present suit were also barred. Held that the present suit was not barred. The plaintiffs in the former suit had no general warrant, such as is conferred on plaintiffs suing under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, to represent the public, the objects of the charity. They based their title to sue on their particular appointment by Purshotam, and when it was found that they had by limitation lost their rights to the title derived from that appointment, they ceased to represent the public just as though they had been removed

At that time the zamindar was a minor under the Court of Wards, and he was represented at the enquiry by the manager of his estate appointed under s. 8 of Regulation V of 1804. In a suit brought by the zamindar to recover the land it was contended that the decision of the survey officer was not binding on the zamindar because he was not properly represented by his guardian at the enquiry. Held that the decision of the survey officer was binding on the zamindar, and that the matter in dispute was res judicata, no appeal by way of suit as provided by the Boundary Act, 1860, s. 25, having been brought. KAMARAJU v. 430. — Party for purpose of discovery only—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13, 43—Joint wrong-doers, Judgment against one of several—Contract Act, s. 43.—Prior to and in the year 1865 the defendant's brother B carried on an extensive business in Bombay and China. The defendant and another brother A carried on a separate business under the name of A H. In December 1866 B became insolvent, and his property vested in the official assignee. The present suit was brought in 1887 against the defendant by the official assignee to recover certain property which he alleged belonged to the insolvent, and ought to be distributed amongst his creditors. The plaintiff alleged that in 1865 the insolvent was possessed of a very large amount of property, and that, being unwilling to meet his liabilities, he and his son and his two brothers, viz., A and the defendant R, fraudulently concealed his property from his creditors, and in September 1866 he himself went to Damar beyond British jurisdiction. In 1881 the plaintiff, having obtained information that some of the insolvent's property was in the possession of his brother A, filed a suit (473 of 1881) against A to recover it. That suit was referred to arbitration, and the plaintiff obtained a decree for Rs. 60,000. The plaintiff now alleged that, shortly before the hearing of that suit, and subsequently, he had obtained information which led him to believe that the defendant had obtained some of the insolvent's property for which he was accountable. The defendant had been made a party to the former suit (473 of 1881) for the purpose of discovery only, and it was in the course of such discovery being given that some of the above information had been obtained. The plaint then set forth, in detail, the various items of claim in respect of which the plaintiff sought to make the defendant liable. The defendant pleaded that the said claims had been in issue in the former suit (473 of 1881), and were adjudicated upon, and that this suit was therefore barred by s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code; that the plaintiff was barred by s. 43 of the

Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff having omitted to include these claims in the former suit, to which defendant was a party; that the decree in the former suit (478 of 1881) was (inter alia) in respect of the matters alleged in this suit, and that, as according to the plaintiff's allegation the defendant in that suit was a joint wrong-doer with the defendant in this suit in respect of these matters, the said decree was a bar to this suit. Held by SCOTT, J., that the suit was not barred either by s. 13 or s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant was made a party to the former suit for certain limited purposes only. No relief was asked from him; no decree was made against him. He was merely a nominal defendant. He was not a party to the former suit in such a way as to bring the present suit within the section. Held also that the rule of King v. Hoare, 13 M. and W., 494, applies in India, viz., that a judgment recovered against any one of several joint-debtors merges the remedy for the joint debt, and is a bar to an action against a co-debtor upon the joint liability; and, similarly, in a matter of forfeiture, a judgment against one of several wrong-doers is a bar to an action on the same matter against the others. Such of the wrongs therefore alleged in the present suit as were of a joint character, and were adjudicated upon the previous suit, were extinguished by the former judgment. Applying the above rule, the Judge disallowed some of the items of the plaintiff's claim, and allowed others, and directed an account in respect of the latter. The Court of appeal confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. RAHMUBHOY HUBIBBOHAY v. TURNER

(b) INTERVENORS.

434. — Intervenor added in former suit—Suit against other parties.—A suit to recover possession of land, on the ground of purchase from the admitted owners, is not barred by Act VIII of 1859, s. 2, simply because plaintiff's claim as against the same defendant was dismissed in a former suit in which he (defendant) appeared as an intervenor. TUKHA v. 436. — Suit for rent—Enjoyment of and receipt of rent, Proof of.—Plaintiff sued for rent of land alleged to be a 3 annas 15 gundahs share held by him on a defined right. Defendant admitted the claim. An intervenor appeared, alleging that the land was situate in the 7 annas share of the talukh, and that he had purchased 3 annas 15 gundahs of this share, for which a decree had been given to him, and that he held it as a joint co-parcener. Held that, as the decree did not state patently the subject-matter to be that of this suit, the principle laid down in the case of Syud Ahmed Beza, 5th August 1863, did not apply; and that, as it did not clearly adjudicate against the plaintiff's right, the principle laid down in the case of Tarinee v. Ramundoss Moakhef, 1 W. R., 881, had no bearing. Accordingly the intervenor was found to show actual and bond fide receipt of rent as required by s. 77, Act X of 1859. GUGUN CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. AJMULALI . 11 W. R., 91

439. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Suit for rent.—The plaintiffs brought this suit to establish, as against the defendants, their title to certain land in the occupation of a tenant. In a previous suit instituted by one of the present defendants against the tenant for rent, one of the present plaintiffs (representing the right now claimed by all of them) intervened as a defendant, on the ground that he was the person entitled to the rent, and failed to establish his claim. Held, following the Full Bench case of Hurri Sunker Mookerjee v. Muttaram Patro, 13 B. L. R., 238, that the plaintiffs in this suit were barred by the judgment in the former suit. When once it is made clear that the self-same right and title is substantially in issue in two suits, the precise form in which either suit was brought, or the fact that the plaintiff in the one case was the defendant in the other, becomes immaterial. 452. ———— Decision when binding between co-defendants.—Where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff, the adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and defendants. But for this effect to arise, there must be a conflict of interest between the defendants and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. Without necessity, a judgment will not be res judicata amongst defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have been collectively defeated in resisting a claim to a share made against them as a group. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN v. 454. ———— Civil Procedure Code, s. 13.—Two-thirds of a village were sold by T, P, and B. B was the widow of S, her name being recorded in respect of the property formerly recorded in his name, and what she sold was his one-third share in the village, the other one-third being sold by T and P. The vendors having refused to give possession of the property, the purchasers sued them for possession of it and joined as defendants to the suit C, D, and M, to whom belonged the remaining one-third share in the village. These latter persons contended, inter alia, that the family was a joint one, and that B was not competent to alienate her deceased husband's share in the village. The Court decided that the family was joint. After B's death, her daughter K, whose name had been recorded in place of her mother's, made a usufructuary mortgage of another village in which her deceased father had formerly owned a share. A suit was brought by certain persons who had purchased the right in the same village of the representatives in interest of C, D, and M against K, her mortgagee, and their vendors, to set aside the mortgage and recover the interest which they had purchased. They contended that the family was joint, and that the question whether it was joint or divided was res judicata by reason of the decision in the former litigation. Held that the question whether the family was joint or divided had not, in the former suit, been determined among the defendants inter se, but simply as against the plaintiff, and could only be res judicata against him or parties claiming under the same title; and the decree in that suit was therefore not binding against

455. ———— Suit for pre-emption.—M sued K and J to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of property which he alleged K had sold to J. K denied that she had sold the property to J. J set up as a defence that M had waived his right of pre-emption. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the sale had never taken place. Held that the finding as to the alleged sale was one between the plaintiff and the defendants in the suit, and not between the defendant-vendor and the defendant-vendee, who were not litigating, and would not bar adjudication of the matter in issue between them in a suit brought by the latter for the establishment of the sale. JUMNA SINGH v. KAMARTSINGH [I. L. R., 3 All., 188]

456. ———— Civil Procedure Code, s. 13.—Issue decided in former suit, in which parties were rival defendants claiming under different titles.—B sued L N and P V to recover certain property claimed under a nuncupative will of his father N. P V denied the will, and alleged that the property was ancestral and had vested in him by survivorship. L N set up title to the property under a will in writing executed by N and denied the title both of B and of P V. The question whether P V was divided or not from N was tried. It was found that the will in writing was valid, that P V was divided, and that B's title was not proved. In a suit by L N against P V to recover certain land granted to her by the will executed by N.—Held that the question whether P V was divided from N was res judicata under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure by reason of the decision in the former suit, although in that suit P V and L N were both defendants. VENKATYA v. NARAYANNA [I. L. R., 11 Mad., 204]

457. ———— Civil Procedure Code, s. 13, expl. V.—Suit for possession of a share in the property of a Mahomedan family.—In a suit in 1882 between the members of a family following the Mahomedan law of inheritance, in which the plaintiffs sued as sharers for the recovery of their share in certain property, one of the defendants pleaded that a paramba, part of the property in dispute, was not subject to division, but this plea was unsuccessful, and a decree was passed for the plaintiffs. The present suit was brought by a mortgagee from one of the defendants in the former suit (against whom it had been decided ex-parte) to recover his share of the above-mentioned paramba, the subject-matter of his mortgage; the mortgagor was joined as defendant, among others, including the defendant who had raised the plea above stated. This plea was repeated by the same person. Held that the claim that the paramba was not subject to division was res judicata by virtue of the Civil Procedure Code, s. 13, expl. V. CHANDU v. KUNHAMMED

458. Civil Procedure Code, s. 13, expl. V—Suit for possession of land.—The plaintiff, a junior member of a Malabar tarwad, alleged that her karnavan had assigned to her his kuikanom right over certain land, and that she had obtained a fresh demise from the jenmi and placed a tenant in possession. The tenant was dispossessed by the present karnavan, and in 1888 sued him and the plaintiff to recover possession of part of the land. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the above allegations of the plaintiff were unfounded. She now sued the present karnavan for possession of the entire land. Held that the claim of the plaintiff was res judicata so far as it related to the land in question in the former suit, but not as to the rest. MADHAVI v. KRELU

459. Plea raised in former suit.—A Mapilla, alleging that certain "family property" had been enjoyed by herself and the defendants (who were her relations on the mother's side) in common till one year before suit, when she was excluded from possession, now sued to recover the share to which she claimed to be entitled under the Mahomedan law of inheritance. It appeared that the property had been acquired in the lifetime of the plaintiff's maternal grandfather, who had died more than thirty years before suit, and that one of his sons had obtained a decree for his share of it in a suit to which, among others, the plaintiff and the father of the present contesting defendants were parties as defendants, and that a plea then raised by the latter to the effect that the property had been acquired by him was overruled. The present claim was sought to be resisted on the same ground, which was the subject of the second issue; and it was held by the lower Courts that the defendants were estopped from raising the plea, but there was no evidence as to whether this matter had been in controversy between the present plaintiff and her uncle in the former suit, which was decided ex-parte as far as she was concerned. Held, on second appeal without finding on the question of res judicata, that in the absence of evidence no finding on the second issue should be called for. ABDUL KADER v. AISHAMMA question were their own and were not subject to partition. It appeared that in a previous suit brought by a third party against the present plaintiff and defendants and others to recover his share of the agram lands it was held that the lands now in question formed part of the lands of the agram, and they were divided in execution of the decree in that suit. Against the present plaintiff that suit was decreed ex-parte. Held that the defendants were precluded under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 13, from raising the above plea. LATCHANNA v. SARAVAYYA

461. Party through whom plaintiff claimed, and defendant, co-defendants in former suit.—In a suit for land the plaintiff claimed under a conveyance executed to him by defendant No. 1. The property had previously belonged to the father, since deceased, of the first defendant's wife, and her sister, defendant No. 2. Shortly after the father's death, a suit for maintenance was brought by his sister-in-law against his widow and two daughters, in which the then defendants alleged that the property now in question had been given by him to the wife of the plaintiff's vendor, and the Court recorded a finding that the gift was valid. Defendant No. 2 now raised a plea that the gift to her sister had not been accompanied by possession and was invalid, and she asserted title in herself under the will of her mother, under which title she had been in possession for ten years. Held that the second defendant was not precluded by the proceedings in the former suit, in which defendant No. 2 and the wife of defendant No. 1 had been co-defendants, from raising the plea above referred to. RAMANUJA AYYANGAR v. NARAYANA AYYANGAR

462. Parties to subsequent suit arrayed on the same side as co-defendants in previous suit—No necessary adjudication between co-defendants—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13.—Where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff, there must be such an adjudication, and in such a case the adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and the defendants. But for this effect to arise there must be a conflict of interests amongst the defendants and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. suit was decreed with costs, the whole of which were realized from G. In a suit for contribution brought by G against S and A the lower Appellate Court found that G, S, and A had conspired in setting up a false defence in the former suit in order to defeat P's claim. The only evidence on which the lower Appellate Court had acted as establishing such collusion was the finding of the Court in the former suit (gathered from the grounds of appeal in that suit). Held that that finding was inadmissible in evidence, as laid down in Sunder Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry, I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352, being the finding in a case in which G, S, and A were all co-defendants, and a third party the plaintiff; and the case was remanded for the determination of the question whether G, S, and A were wrong-doers, and were as such held liable for the costs of the former suit. *GOBIND CHUNDER NUNDY v. 9. COMPETENT COURT.(a) GENERAL CASES.

465. ——— Court without jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—The decision of a Court, in order to be conclusive in another Court, must have been that of a Court which would have had jurisdiction to decide the question raised in the subsequent suit in which the decision is given in evidence as conclusive. The words "Court of competent jurisdiction," used in s. 13 of the Court of Civil Procedure, include the meaning that the first Court must not have been precluded by the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction from deciding the question raised in the other. The two Courts must exercise such concurrent jurisdiction in regard to the pecuniary limit of their powers that the subject-matter of the second suit would not have been beyond the powers of the Court which disposed of the prior one. The defence made to a suit on a bond for Rs. 12,000 and interest thereon, in a Court having no pecuniary limit of jurisdiction, was that in a prior suit for Rs. 1,665, balance of interest, brought in a Court with power to try suits not exceeding Rs. 5,000 in value, the principal sum due on that bond had been decided to be Rs. 4,790. Held that the issue as to the amount of principal due on the bond had not been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 13. MISSIR RAGHO BARDIAL v. SHRO BAKSH SINGH [I. L. R., 9 Cal., 439; 12 C. L. R., 530; L. R., 9 I. A., 191]

466. ——— Act VIII of 1859, s. 2—Act X of 1877, s. 13—Cross-appeal—Practice.—The decision in a suit in order to be final and conclusive as res judicata upon an issue raised in another suit must be the decision of a Court which would have had jurisdiction to decide the question raised in the subsequent suit, in which the prior decision is given in evidence as conclusive. This proposition, stated in the judgment in Feroz v. Bechan, 8 W. R., 175, and affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Missir Raghobardial v. Bak h Singh, I. L. R., 9 Cal., 439, is applied equally to cases under Act VIII of 1859, s. 2 (supplemented by the general law), and to cases under the more complete enactment in Act X of 1877, s. 13, which is not to be construed as having altered the former law. A suit was brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge by a Hindu against the widow of a deceased brother, claiming his property by right of survivorship, the issue being whether, at the death of the latter, the ownership of the brothers was joint or separate. An order under Act XXVII of 1860, granting a certificate to the widow, did not, on the above issue, operate as res judicata in the widow's favour, being a proceeding of representation, and not otherwise of title. Held also that a decision of the same issue in a Munsif's Court in a rent suit brought by the widow, the surviving brother, on his application, having been made a party defendant under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859, did not constitute res judicata in her favour. Krishna Bahari Roy v. Brajeswari Chowdhury, L. R., 3 I. A., 283, referred to and followed. Held also that the brother having appealed against a decree dismissing the suit as res judicata (the judgment which that decree followed having nevertheless found that the widow was disentitled by reason of the brothers having been in fact joint in estate), the widow could have supported the decree without filing a cross-appeal as to that finding, on the ground that the decree had been rightly made (though not for the reason given) in her favour. RUN BHADUR SINGH v. LUCHO KORB [I. L. R., 11 Cal., 301; L. R., 12 I. A., 35]

Reversing, as far as the question of res judicata was concerned, the decision of the High Court in RUN BHADUR SINGH v. LUCHO KORB [I. L. R., 6 Cal., 406; 7 C. L. R., 25]

467. — Courts without concurrent jurisdiction—Court not having jurisdiction to decide question of title.—Where the Court trying the case, in which the judgment is set up as res judicata, has not concurrent jurisdiction with the Court trying the subsequent case, the principle of res judicata cannot apply. So the judgment in a suit before the Deputy Collector which decides merely questions of rent—in other words a rent-suit—pronounced by a Court not having jurisdiction to decide the question of title to the property itself cannot be regarded as amounting to res judicata in a subsequent suit brought to decide the question of title to that property. *Ram Bahadoor v. [3 C. W. N., 202]

468. — Court without power to make final decision—Issue decided in a suit not subject to appeal.—Same issue raised in a subsequent suit subject to appeal—Small Cause Court suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852), s. 13.—Meaning of the words “competent to try such subsequent suit.”—In 1879 the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants to recover Rs 119 which he alleged had been wrongfully exacted from him by the defendants as enhanced rent of certain land in his occupation. He claimed to be owner of the land subject to a quit-rent payable to the defendants. The defendants denied his ownership, and asserted their right to levy the enhanced rent. The lower Court held that the defendants were entitled to the enhanced rent, and dismissed the plaintiff's claim, and the decree was confirmed on appeal by the District Court. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which held that the plaintiff's claim being for an amount less than Rs 500 and within the cognisance of a Court of Small Causes, no second appeal lay. In 1883 the plaintiff brought the present suit in the District Court to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs 684 alleged to have been wrongfully exacted from him by the defendants as enhanced rent of the land in question. He made the same allegations as in the former suit. The District Judge dismissed the suit, holding it to be res judicata. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held that, although the material question in both suits was the same,—viz., as to the defendant's right to enhance the plaintiff's rent,—yet the decision of the District Court upon that point in the previous suit was not res judicata so as to prevent the question being again raised between the parties. From the decision in the former suit there was no appeal by reason of the suit being one for an amount less than Rs 500. Had that suit been for a larger amount, the decision of the District Court would have been subject to an appeal to the High Court. It could not have been intended by the Legislature that a decision should acquire a conclusive importance from the fact of its being made in a suit for a small amount which it could not have had if the amount was larger. The former decision could not be appealed against to the High Court, and thus, though the District Court which gave that decision was in one sense “competent to try” the second suit, and did try it, yet it was not competent to try the second suit with final effect, as it had tried the earlier one. In s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852) the words “competent to try such subsequent suit or issue” must mean “competent to try the suit or issue with conclusive effect.” The District Court could not in the present suit have tried with conclusive effect, and disposed of the issue tried in the first suit, and hence the prior decision was not res judicata. BHOLABHAI v. ADESANG. BHOLABHAI v. COLLECTOR OF KAIRA

[I. L. R., 9 Bom., 75]

469. — Court not of competent jurisdiction.—A brought a suit against B for Rs 152, that is, for one instalment due under a bond. The suit was heard and decided by a Subordinate Judge of second class, who had been deputed to assist a Subordinate Judge of the first class. A obtained a decree for the amount claimed. A then brought a second suit against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the first class to recover Rs 525, being the amount of two instalments due under the bond. In this suit B raised the same contentions as in the former suit. Held that the decision in the first suit did not operate as res judicata in the second suit, as the Court that tried the first suit had no jurisdiction to try the second suit. RAMDAYAL v. JANKIDAS I. L. R., 24 Bom., 456

470. — Decision in superior Court of suit cognisable by inferior Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 13.—In a suit for possession of immoveable property before the Subordinate Judge, it was objected that the suit ought to have been instituted before the Munsif, the value of the property being less than Rs 1,000. An issue having been framed on this point, other issues were also framed as to the sanity of the plaintiff, his having had possession of the property, and evidence upon all the issues was gone into. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the first issue, but expressed his opinion that the other issues ought also to have been decided against the plaintiff. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff for the same relief in the Court of the Munsif,—Held that the questions depending on the issues raised, other than the issues as to the valuation of the suit, were not res judicata. RAM GOBIND JHA v. 467. ——— Courts without concurrent jurisdiction—Court not having jurisdiction to decide question of title.—Where the Court trying the case, in which the judgment is set up as res judicata, has not concurrent jurisdiction with the Court trying the subsequent case, the principle of res judicata cannot apply. So the judgment in a suit before the Deputy Collector which decides merely questions of rent—in other words a rent-suit—pronounced by a Court not having jurisdiction to decide the question of title to the property itself cannot be regarded as amounting to res judicata in a subsequent suit brought to decide the question of title to that property. *Ran Bahadur v. 468. ——— Court without power to make final decision—Issue decided in a suit not subject to appeal—Same issue raised in a subsequent suit subject to appeal—Small Cause Court suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852), s. 13—Meaning of the words “competent to try such subsequent suit.”—In 1879 the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants to recover Rs 119 which he alleged had been wrongfully exacted from him by the defendants as enhanced rent of certain land in his occupation. He claimed to be owner of the land subject to a quit-rent payable to the defendants. The defendants denied his ownership, and asserted their right to levy the enhanced rent. The lower Court held that the defendants were entitled to the enhanced rent, and dismissed the plaintiff's claim, and the decree was confirmed on appeal by the District Court. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which held that the plaintiff's claim being for an amount less than Rs 500 and within the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, no second appeal lay. In 1880 the plaintiff brought the present suit in the District Court to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs 68 alleged to have been wrongfully exacted from him by the defendants as enhanced rent of the land in question. He made the same allegations as in the former suit. The District Judge dismissed the suit, holding it to be res judicata. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held that, although the material question in both suits was the same,—vis., as to the defendant's right to enhance the plaintiff's rent,—yet the decision of the District Court upon that point in the previous suit was not res judicata so as to prevent the question being again raised between the parties. From the decision in the former suit there was no appeal by reason of the suit being one for an amount less than Rs 500. Had that suit been for a larger amount, the decision of the District Court would have been subject to an appeal to the High Court. It could not have been intended by the Legislature that a decision should acquire a conclusive importance from the fact of its being made in a suit for a small amount which it could not have had if the amount was larger. The former decision could not be appealed against to the High Court, and thus, though the District Court which gave that

decision was in one sense “competent to try” the second suit, and did try it, yet it was not competent to try the second suit with final effect, as it had tried the earlier one. In s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852) the words “competent to try such subsequent suit or issue” must mean “competent to try the suit or issue with conclusive effect.” The District Court could not in the present suit have tried with conclusive effect, and disposed of the issue tried in the first suit, and hence the prior decision was not res judicata. *BHOLABHAI v. 469. ——— Court not of competent jurisdiction.—A brought a suit against B for Rs 153, that is, for one instalment due under a bond. The suit was heard and decided by a Subordinate Judge of second class, who had been deputed to assist a Subordinate Judge of the first class. A obtained a decree for the amount claimed. A then brought a second suit against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the first class to recover Rs 535, being the amount of two instalments due under the bond. In this suit B raised the same contentions as in the former suit. Held that the decision in the first suit did not operate as res judicata in the second suit, as the Court that tried the first suit had no jurisdiction to try the second suit. *RAMDAYAL v. An issue having been framed on this point, other issues were also framed as to the sanity of the plaintiff, his having had possession of the property, and evidence upon all the issues was gone into. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the first issue, but expressed his opinion that the other issues ought also to have been decided against the plaintiff. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff for the same relief in the Court of the Munsif,—Held that the questions depending on the issues raised, other than the issues as to the valuation of the suit, were not res judicata. *RAM GOBIND JHA v. Code, 1882, s. 13—Decree of competent Court.—In 1875 P sued in Munsif's Court to eject a tenant from a house and to recover arrears of rent. S intervened and claimed the house under a deed of gift. The value of the property comprised in the deed of gift exceeded the limit of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court. The suit was dismissed, but on appeal the claim of S under the deed of gift was adjudicated upon and rejected, and P obtained a decree for the land. In 1882 S sued P to recover all the property comprised in the deed of gift. Held that S was estopped by the decree in the former suit from claiming the house. It was contended by P that the deed of gift was invalid. Held that, as to validity of the deed of gift, the decree of the Munsif's Court was not the decree of a competent Court within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and therefore that S was not estopped from showing that the deed was valid and claiming the rest of the property comprised therein. PATHUMA v. 473. ———— Jurisdiction of Court at time suit is brought—Decision of Munsif—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 13.

—In a suit for malikana the issue between the parties substantially raises the question of the proprietary right to the estate in respect of which the malikana is claimed; and when the question of the proprietary right has been decided in a previous suit between the same parties, a subsequent suit for malikana will be barred as res judicata. The fact that the previous suit had been brought in a Munsif's Court, whereas the present suit was brought before a Subordinate Judge, did not affect the question, inasmuch as the property was the same, and it was not shown that the present suit, if brought in 1860, would not have been within the jurisdiction of the Munsif, nor was it alleged that the suit in 1860 was beyond his jurisdiction. In s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882 the words "in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time the first suit is brought. Thus, when the first suit is within the jurisdiction of a Munsif, and the subsequent suit, by reason of an increase in value of the property, is beyond his jurisdiction, such subsequent suit would nevertheless be barred, inasmuch as, if the subsequent suit had been brought at the time when the first suit was brought, the Munsif would have been competent to try it. GOPI NATH CHOBBY v. s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, "in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit," refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought. The Court of S held that the land was an accretion to A's estate in the district of S. In a subsequent suit brought by B in the Court of G against A for the land to which the subject of the former suit had been found to be an accretion.—Held that the holding in the former suit necessarily decided that the land claimed by B was in the district of S, and therefore that the Court of G, under Act VIII of 1859, s. 14, had no jurisdiction. PAHALWAN SINGH v. By the 4th section the administration of civil and criminal justice was vested in an officer appointed by the Governor General in Council, to be denominated Agent to the Governor General. By the 5th section authority was conferred on the Governor General to determine in Council, inter alia, "to what extent the decision of the Agent in civil suits shall be final." In 1834, by an order of the Governor General, it was ordered that no appeal should lie from the orders of the Agent to the Sudder Court. Held that an order of an Agent within the districts to which the Regulation applied, made previous to the passing of the Regulation, declaring A to be the rightful heir of B, was not affected by the Regulation, and was not judicial in its nature; and that therefore, in a subsequent suit relating to the inheritance to the same property, the heir of A could not set up the order as conclusive. On 6th July 1895, at Ahmedabad the first defendant borrowed from the plaintiff, for the purposes of the partnership business, a sum of Rs10,000 and passed a khata in the name of his firm. On 25th April 1896, at Baroda he passed another agreement to plaintiff, under which the plaintiff was to recover the debt due to him from the partners jointly and severally. On 2nd October 1896, plaintiff obtained a decree on an award against the first defendant in the Civil Court at Baroda for Rs13,909-4-0, and in execution of this decree he recovered a sum of Rs7,000. In 1897 plaintiff filed this suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad to recover the balance, viz., Rs6,909-4-0, from all the partners (defendants Nos. 1 to 8). Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 resided in Baroda territory, the rest in British India. Defendants Nos. 2, 3, and 4 defended the suit. The rest did not appear. authority of *King v. The Baroda Court had no jurisdiction over the defendants, who were British subjects residing in British territory. 482. — Foreign Court—Judgment of a Native Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13, expl. VI—Meaning of the words "a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit."—The words in s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), "a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit," mean a Court having concurrent jurisdiction with the Court trying the subsequent suit, whether as regards the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction, or the subject-matter of the suit, to try it with conclusive effect. Reading expl. VI with the earlier part of s. 13, the term "Court of competent jurisdiction" includes a foreign competent Court. The plaintiff sued as the adopted son of O to recover certain property in British territory. The defendants disputed the plaintiff's adoption. The plaintiff relied on a decree of a Native Court which he had obtained against defendant No. 2 in a suit for possession of certain other property belonging to O and situate within the territorial jurisdiction of the Native Court. In that suit the question of plaintiff's adoption had been raised and decided in plaintiff's favour. In the present suit both the lower Courts, without attaching any weight to this decree of the Native Court, held that the plaintiff's adoption was not proved, and dismissed the suit. Held, on second appeal that the question of plaintiff's adoption was res judicata as between him and defendant No. 2, the judgment of the Native Court being one on the merits and conclusive between the parties within the territory of the Native State. a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises. After the decree, a compromise was effected between all the parties, with the exception of R S, by the terms of which, in consideration of the judgment-debtors (mortgagors) undertaking to do certain acts, S S promised to execute his decree against only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises. The judgment-debtors (mortgagors) having failed to carry out the compromise, S S applied for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises, but on the petition of R S setting out the terms of the compromise to which he was no party, the Subordinate Judge, by an order of the 7th September 1885, held that under the agreement S S was entitled to sell only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises, which was accordingly directed to be sold. That order was not appealed against, but subsequently in March 1886 S S made a fresh application for a sale of the remainder of the premises, R S objecting. Held that the order of the 7th September was one which the Court was competent to make under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure and by reason of that order not being appealed it became final. BASUDRO NARAIN SINGH v. The objection was disallowed, and the land was sold. She then sued the execution-purchaser to set aside the Court-sale, and obtained a decree, against which no appeal was preferred. The lease contained a provision that it should be cancelled on default being made in payment of the rent and kist, and it contained no express covenant for quiet enjoyment. In 1887 default was made in payment of the rent and kist. A thereupon cancelled the lease and sued X and Y in a subordinate Court and obtained a decree for the arrear, the total amount of his claim being Rs. 2,807. In that suit X alleged that Y was merely a name lender for A, who desired to benefit himself at the expense of the charity, and also that certain raiyats setting up a false claim had evicted X from the lands demised at the instigation of A, who had subsequently sought unsuccessfully to obtain further advantages for himself. The Subordinate Judge framed an issue on each of these allegations and recorded findings in the negative. In the same year X filed a suit for damages for breach of contract against A and Y in the High Court, repeating in his plaint the above allegations. When that suit came on for hearing, it was dismissed for default, Y being the only party who appeared. X now sued A again on the same cause of action, making the same allegations. Y was subsequently brought on to the record as being a necessary party to the suit, being joined as second defendant, but he applied to be and was struck off the record on the ground that the dismissal of the former suit in the High Court was final as against him. Held that the matters put in issue in the subordinate Court were not res judicata by reason of the decision of that Court; and that the plaint disclosed a good cause of action against the lessor. VITHILINGA PADAYACHI v. VITHILINGA MUDALI . I. L. R., 15 Mad., 111

487. — Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 18, 433—Suit against a Sovereign Prince.—A suit for a declaration of the title of the plaintiffs' tarwad to certain land was filed in a District Court against the Maharaja of Cochin and others, including the trustees of a devasom. It appeared that the same land was the subject of a suit instituted in a subordinate Court on the 6th August 1877, to which the representatives of both the plaintiffs' tarwad and the devasom were parties, and that the land was then found to be the property of the devasom, and a decree was passed accordingly. It was contended that the present claim was not res judicata by reason of that decree, because, under the provisions of Act X of 1877, s. 433, which came into operation during the pendency of that suit, no Sovereign Prince could be sued in any Court subordinate to a District Court, and the Court which passed that decree was not therefore “a Court of jurisdiction competent to try” the present suit within the meaning of Civil Procedure Code, s. 18. Held that, although these words must be taken to refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time the suit was heard and determined, yet the present claim was res judicata, since the title to the land was a matter in issue within the cognizance of the Subordinate Judge and was adjudicated on by him. KUNJI AMMA v. It was found that the alleged adoption was valid, and the suit was dismissed. The then defendant now brought in 1889 a suit in the same Court to recover possession of land from the then plaintiff alleging that it had been wrongfully transferred to her by way of gift by his adoptive mother. ried the adoption and asserted that the transfer was made as having taken place in accordance with an arrangement made by her father in his lifetime. It was admitted that the value of the whole property, to which the plaintiff was entitled by virtue of his adoption, if it was a valid adoption, exceeded Rs. 500. The court of first appeal held that the question of the adoption was not res judicata, and observed that the transfer to the defendant was apparently made to induce her to abandon her litigation as to the adoption. Held that the defendant was not at liberty to question the plaintiff's adoption, that matter being res judicata, and that the Court should try whether the transfer was made bona fide by the plaintiff's mother as his guardian for his benefit. VENKATARAGHAVA v. This objection was allowed, and the plaintiff then sued for establishment of his right to possession of the land jointly with the objector, making the former judgment-debtor and the objector defendants to the suit. The Subordinate Judge in first appeal held that the Munsif had acted under s. 381 of the Code, and applying s. 13 of the Code dismissed the suit. Held on appeal that under the circumstances the Munsif had no jurisdiction to act under s. 381, and therefore his order was not a res judicata in the proceedings. MAHABIR PRASAD v. 491. ———— Suit by a uralan against an agent of a devasom—Repudiation of agency—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Munsif, Jurisdiction of.—In 1873 a predecessor of the plaintiff claiming to be the urala of a devasom brought a suit in a District Munsif's Court against the present defendant, whom he alleged to be an agent to the devasom, and the defendant disputed the urala right of the plaintiff and denied that he had been appointed agent as alleged. Issues as to both of these matters were decided in favour of the defendant, and the suit was dismissed in 1874. A suit was now brought in 1890 for a declaration of the plaintiff's title as uralan, and to recover from the defendant as such agent property of a value which exceeded the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of a District Munsif, the suit being therefore instituted in the Subordinate Judge's Court. Semle—The decision in the prior suit did not

496. — Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 13.—In a suit for arrears of rent brought against A in a Munsif's Court, B intervened as a defendant, alleging that he, and not A, was the true tenant in possession. B succeeded in the first Court, but on appeal it was decided that B had no right in or possession of the tenure. In a second suit for arrears of rent brought against A, the tenure was sold in execution of decree, and the landlords purchased and took possession of it. B brought the present suit (valued at more than Rs.1,000) in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for declaration of his right and recovery of possession. The lower Court of appeal held that the decision in the former suit, in which B intervened, operated as res judicata upon the question of title raised in the present suit, and in support of that decision it was contended that the word "suit" in s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code included an appeal, and that, as the District Judge who tried the appeal in the former suit had jurisdiction to try the present suit and it was the decision of that Court which was pleaded in bar, the defence on the ground of res judicata was good and valid. Held that the contention was not right, and the present suit was not barred by res judicata, the former suit having been brought in a Court which was not a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the present suit. *Ran Bahadur Singh v. In a subsequent suit for rent valued at more than Rs.100 between the same parties, the question of instalment was again raised, as the plaintiffs claimed the rent to be payable in four instalments. The defendants inter alia pleaded that the question as to instalment was barred as res judicata. The Munsif held that it was so barred. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif. On a second appeal to the High Court,—Held that the judgment in the previous suit operated as res judicata, notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in

Held that, as the Small Cause Court could not have jurisdiction to decide as to the lien, its decree would only be relevant as showing that the defendants at the time owed the money to the plaintiff, and that it would be open to the defendant to question the execution and bond files of the bond as affecting the property which he had taken by conveyance. *POHOLI MULLICK v. Decree in suit of Small Cause nature—Subsequent suit for declaration of title and to set aside agreement—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 18.—The plaintiff, claiming to be entitled together with two of the defendants to the office of arehaka of a temple, sued in 1889 for a declaration of his title, and for a declaration that an agreement entered into by them in 1886 with the other defendants was void as having been executed under coercion and because part of the consideration was the withdrawal of a pending criminal charge of trespass and theft against them. The defendants pleaded that the validity of the agreement was res judicata for the reason that they had brought a previous action upon it against the plaintiffs and had obtained a decree for Rs. 75. Held that the validity of the agreement was not res judicata, because the previous suit was of a Small Cause nature. SEIRANGACHARIAR v. Meaning of—Question of title—Presidency Towns Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 28, 37.—An order made upon a claim to attached property filed in the Small Cause Court of Calcutta in a proceeding under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code is "an order made in a suit" within the meaning of s. 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), and is final, subject only to the right to apply for a new trial. Ismail Solomon Bhamji v. Mahomed Khan, I. L. R., 18 Calc., 296, followed. The words of s. 28 (Act XV of 1882), "for the purpose of execution," must mean for all purposes of execution, inclusive of the purpose of determining objections made to attachments. Tiled huts for all the purposes of execution are therefore moveable property under that section. The Small Cause Court has full power and authority to determine the question of title under a mortgage over attached property, and that question is therefore res judicata. DENO NATH BATASYAL v. RASH MONER DOSSER* [25 W. R., 189]

526. ——— Decision in suit declaring title—Subsequent suit for rent.—A decree of a Civil Court in a suit concerning the title is not of itself in all cases a bar to a suit against a tenant for rent by the person against whom such decree has been obtained. When the decree clearly adjudicates against the plaintiff's right and the Collector sees that it relates to the property in question and is in force, the Collector should give effect to the decree as a bar to the plaintiff's suit for rent, notwithstanding that the plaintiff may have an actual receipt of rent prior to the institution of the suit. TARINEE v. BROJONATH ADITYA

[14 W. R., 301]

512. Suit in Revenue Court under s. 28, Act X of 1859—Title—Subsequent suit for possession.—A decision in a suit to recover occupation where the plaintiff is found to have been illegally ejected under Act X of 1859, s. 28, cl. 6, does not bar a regular suit for possession by the defendant in the former suit grounding his claim on title, and in which the question of title is to be tried. SOORJEE KANTO ROY v. FORLONG

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 362; 6 W. R., Act X, 44]

513. Decision of Deputy Collector in suit for ejectment.—Where a Deputy Collector declined jurisdiction in a suit for ejectment under s. 28, Act X of 1859, and the appeal against this decision to the Judge was dismissed, Held that that decision was no bar to a suit for ouster in the Civil Court, either in the way of res judicata or otherwise. *BASER MAHOMED v. [7 W. R., 97]

514. Possessory suit under Rent Act.—A possessory suit under cl. 6 of s. 28 of the Rent Act, 1859, by a raiyat against his zamindar did not bar a suit for confirmation of title by the intervenor in that suit. TARA CHAND GHOSE v. RADHAMONEE DOSSEE

[7 W. R., 469]

515. Suit for rent—Jurisdiction of Collector.—In a suit for rent under Act X of 1859, the Collector had no jurisdiction to decide a question of mokurari title otherwise than so far as it might be incidental to the determination of the amount of rent, if any, due; and his decision on such a question was therefore not binding in a subsequent suit to establish the mokurari right. *BABUR ALI v. 517. Same parties in different character.—The decision in a suit under Act X of 1859 against the defendants as the plaintiff's tenants did not bar a suit brought in the Civil Court against the same defendants as the plaintiff's vendees, the parties being accidentally the same persons, but legally different persons, with different rights and interests. *GOLAM AHMED v. 518. Suit to assess or resume invalid lakhiraj land—Jurisdiction of Collector—Act X of 1859, s. 28.—A suit by a zamindar to assess or resume land alleged to be invalid lakhiraj, under s. 28 of Act X of 1859, had to be brought in the Revenue Courts. GUNGA HURRY DHOBBY v. TRIFF . . . 1 W. R., 31

In such a suit a Collector had no jurisdiction to try whether a title under a grant made prior to the 1st of December 1790 was valid or not. MOOROOBEE SAHOO v. LATOO COOMAR W. R., F. B., 70

519. Act X of 1859, s. 28—Jurisdiction of Collector.—If it was established, in a suit under s. 28, Act X of 1859, that the defendant's lakhiraj tenure was created prior to 1790, it was immaterial whether it was within plaintiff's talukh or not. Therefore the finding upon the question of parcel or no parcel by a Deputy Collector in such a suit was not binding on the Civil Court in any suit which might thereafter be brought to resume the land as invalid lakhiraj created prior to 1790, or in any other suit. *RAMNEEDHY BOYDE v. s. 2.—A brought a suit against B in the Collector's terms of which A, in consideration of a loan of Rs. 10,000, stipulated that B should apply a certain alleged that the bond was false. The Collector, in was genuine, and this decision was affirmed on appeal.

B afterwards sued A in the Civil Court upon the bond. Held per PEACOCK, C.J., and PHAR, J.

The plaintiff thereupon, under the provisions of s. 39 of that Act, preferred an application contesting his liability to be ejected, alleging that he had a right of occupancy in such land jointly with the defendants and was not their sub-tenant. The Assistant Collector trying the case finally decided that the plaintiff was the sub-tenant of the defendants, and the plaintiff was ejected. The plaintiff then sued the defendants in the Civil Court for a declaration of his right as an occupancy tenant to such land and possession of the same. Held that the decision of the Assistant Collector as to the respective rights of the parties could only be regarded as incidental and ancillary to the main point to be determined by him, viz., whether, assuming the relation of landlord and tenant to exist between the parties, the plaintiff was liable to be ejected; and such decision was not a bar to a fresh determination of such rights in the Civil Court. BIBBAL v. The landholder set up as a defence to this application that S was not entitled to the occupancy of the land by inheritance, but that she was a trespasser. The Revenue Court determined that S was entitled to the occupancy of the land by inheritance, and granted her application. The landholder then sued S in the Civil Court for the possession of the land. Held, per PEARSON, J., and TURNER, J., that the question of S's title to the occupancy of the land was, with reference to the decision of the Revenue Court, res judicata, and could not again be raised in the Civil Court. Per SPANKIE, J., and OLDFIELD, J., contra. *SHIMBHU NARAIN SINGH v. P. Rent Act, 1881, caused a notice of ejectment to be served upon the latter under the provisions of that Act. The defendant did not make an application under that Act contesting his liability to be ejected, and the plaintiffs applied under ss. 40 and 95 (f) of that Act for assistance to eject him. The Revenue Court trying this application rejected it, on the ground that the defendant was not a sub-tenant of the plaintiffs, but a co-sharer in their tenancy. The plaintiffs thereupon sued the defendant in the Civil Court for a declaration that the latter was not a partner with them in the lease, and for possession of the land by his ejectment therefrom. Held that the relief sought in the suit by the plaintiffs was not one which a Revenue Court could give under any of the clauses of s. 95 of the Rent Act, which presupposes an admitted relation of landholder and tenant; and therefore the determination by the Revenue Court of the plaintiff's application for ejectment of the defendant was not the decision of a Court competent to try the suit, and was no bar to its maintenance in a Civil Court within the principle of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. *LODHI SINGH v. obtained possession. Subsequently the occupiers brought a suit in the Civil Court to obtain a declaration that they held plots in question, under a license from the zamindar's predecessor in title, as orchard land, without payment of any rent or other allowance to the landlord, and that they were entitled to retain the land on this footing so long as it should continue to be occupied with trees. They sought to recover possession of the soil and timber, asking also for "a determination of the nature of their tenure" therein. Held that the cognizance of the suit by the Civil Court was not barred by the provisions of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain it was not ousted by s. 95 of the Rent Act, since the "matter" presented by the plaintiffs was not one "on which an application of the nature mentioned in that section" could by them have been made to a Court of revenue, cls. 572. ———— Suit to contest demand of distrainer—Act XII of 1881 (N.-W. P. Rent Act), ss. 84, 148.—A decree of a Rent Court passed upon enquiries made under ss. 84 and 148 of the Rent Act (XII of 1881) is not conclusive as between the parties to the enquiry, upon the question of title, in a suit instituted in a Civil Court for declaration of right to, and possession of, the land, in respect of which the Rent Court decree was passed. The period of limitation for instituting a suit in the Civil Court, as prescribed in these sections, applies only to suits brought by plaintiff or unsuccessful intervenor to have it declared that plaintiff had a title to receive the particular rent claimed, and which the Rent Court has refused to give him, and not to suits for declaration of title to, and possession of, the land in respect of which the rent accrued due. In 1881 the plaintiffs had, under the provisions of the Rent Act (XII of 1881), made a distraint for rent alleged to be due by one of their tenants. The tenant contested the legality of the distraint by a proceeding in the Rent Court, and the defendant intervened on the ground that he had been actually and in good faith in receipt and enjoyment of the rent of the land occupied by the tenant. On the 23rd of June 1881 the Rent Court decided against the defendant; but owing to some irregularity, the distraint was withdrawn. Plaintiffs subsequently instituted a suit in the Rent Court against the tenant for recovery of arrears of rent and the defendant again intervened, and upon enquiry, under s. 148 of the Rent Act (XII of 1881), plaintiffs' suit for arrears of rent was dismissed. Plaintiffs then instituted this suit in the Civil Court for declaration of their right to, and possession of, the land in respect of which distraint proceedings had been taken, and suit for recovery of arrears of rent instituted. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the merits. The plaintiffs appealed and urged (inter alia) that the defendant was estopped, by the decision of the 23rd June 1881, from contesting plaintiffs' title.

In 1877 A S applied for foreclosure of these mortgages and obtained an order under s. 8 of Regulation XXVII of 1806, but these proceedings were, it was alleged, never brought to a legal conclusion. Subsequently, the mortgagee applied in a Court of revenue for partition in his favour of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor resisted that application on the ground that the foreclosure proceedings had not been completed; but the Court, acting under ss. 113 and 114 of Act XIX of 1873, overruled that objection and granted partition in favour of the mortgagee. In 1892 the mortgagor sued the representatives of the original mortgagee in a Civil Court for redemption of the mortgages of 1864. The defendants resisted the suit principally on the plea that s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882 applied and was a bar to the suit; but no plea of res judicata outside s. 13 was raised. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed as stated by the principle of res judicata. Upon seeking to obtain possession of the village, he was resisted by the Collector, whereupon S (after proceedings ineffectually taken by him under s. 289 of the Code) filed a suit against the Collector praying to be put in possession of the village. Held by the Appellate Court (affirming the decision of TUCKER, J.) that the right of S to be put in possession of the village was, as between him and the Collector, res judicata by reason of the dismissal of the Collector's application under s. 246 of the Code (to set aside which dismissal the Collector had not filed a suit within the year allowed for that purpose), and that S ought therefore to have been at once put in possession of the village without further proof of his title. *COLLECTOR OF AHMEDABAD v. Code, s. 873—Withdrawal of suit.—Expl. 587. — Refusal to give relief not claimed in plaint.—Subsequent suit for possession of the land not claimed.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2.—A B instituted a suit against V B to recover possession of one-half of a field. S N and B N, on their application, were made plaintiffs in that suit, but no alteration in the amount either of stamp or claim was made in the plaint. The Principal Sudder Ameen awarded to A B one-fourth of the field, and to S N and B N conjointly he awarded one-fourth, but as to the remaining one-half he passed no decree, as it had not been claimed in the plaint. S N and B N thereupon filed a fresh suit to recover possession of their remaining one-fourth of the field, and the Principal Sudder Ameen passed a decree in their favour. This decree was confirmed by the Joint Judge. Held that the decrees of the lower Courts were erroneous, and that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by the provisions of s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, but leave was granted to them to apply to the Court below for a review of the decree passed in the former suit. VYASRAY BALAJI v. 588. — Plaint in former suit, Description of property in.—Variances between body of plaint and schedule.—The father of the appellant obtained a decree against G's widow and his reversionary heirs, who had intervened in the suit, for possession of property mortgaged by the widow. In the schedule annexed to the plaint the mortgaged property was described as "Mouzah B, uali with dakhili,"—that is, Mouzah B K and Mouzah M B,—but in the body of the plaint it was described simply as "Mouzah B." On the death of plaintiff in that suit, the reversionary heirs of G sued the appellant for an adjudication of their right to 16 annas of Mouzah M B, and it was found that Mouzahs B K and M B were not uali with dakhili, but distinct mouzahs, and that the mortgage-deed did not include Mouzah M B. Held, affirming the judgment of the High Court, that in the first suit the Court was called on to adjudicate upon the property as described in the body of the plaint, and not as described in the schedule annexed thereto, and that the question in the latter suit was therefore not res judicata. HET NARAIN SINGH v. 592. — Issue adversely left undecided in former suit.—In 1878 A, as the auction-purchaser of a talukh, sued 35 persons for possession of a part of this talukh. In this suit the issues raised were—(1) whether A had purchased the whole talukh, or an 8-anna share of the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtors therein; (2) as to the correctness of the boundaries of the talukh as given in the plaint. The Court held that A had purchased the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtors in the talukh, and as it appeared that some of the defendants were not judgment-debtors, and as it did not appear what portions of the talukh were held by the several defendants, the lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit within the proper time. In 1880 A brought a fresh suit against 16 of the same defendants and 19 others for possession of a portion of the same talukh. The issues raised were—(1) whether the suit was barred under s. 13 of the Code; (2) whether A had purchased the whole or a portion of the talukh; (3) whether the defendants were in possession of all the disputed land, and, if not, what portions of the talukh were held by the several defendants; (4) as to the correctness of the boundaries of the talukh. The Munsif held that the suit was not barred, and on the merits gave A a decree. The subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred, and refused to go into the merits. Held that the question whether A had purchased the whole or only a portion of the talukh was res judicata, but that the question as to what lands A was entitled to by virtue of his purchase having been left undecided in the former suit, A was entitled to a decision on that point. RAM CHARAN BUKHARDAR v. In that suit B pleaded that he was a partner of A in the ticca transaction, and that no rent was due from him in consequence thereof. B then sued A for an account of the partnership in the same transaction, and A in that suit denied the partnership. Both suits were heard together by the Munsif, who held A was not a partner. B appealed against the judgment and decree in the account-suit, but did not appeal against that in the rent-suit. It was contended on the appeal that the question as to whether A was or was not a partner was res judicata, by reason of the decision in the rent suit not being appealed against and having become binding. Held that s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply, and that the question was not res judicata. There was no bar at the time the issue was tried and decided by the Munsif, and the Appellate Court was bound to decide the appeal upon the evidence. ABDUL MAJID v. JEW NARAIN MATHO. [I. L. The Judge passed a decree for partition, in which mesne profits for three years prior to the suit were decreed to the plaintiffs, but his judgment and decree were silent with regard to the subsequent profits claimed in the plaint. The defendant appealed against the decree, and the plaintiffs preferred a memorandum of objections against part of it, but did not object to it so far as it omitted to provide for subsequent mesne profits. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit to recover from the defendants mesne profits from the date of the above suit. 11. PRIVATE RIGHTS.

607. ———— Prescriptive right—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13, expl. 5.—Expl. 5 of s. 13 of Act X of 1877 only applies to cases where several different persons claim an easement or other right under one common title,—as, for instance, where the inhabitants of a village claim by custom a right of pasturage over the same tract of land, or to take water from the same spring or well. Where therefore A, in defending a suit brought against him by B to have it declared that he had a right to build a wall across a drain, set up a prescriptive right to use the drain, and it was decided that no such prescriptive right existed in A, and subsequently C brought a suit against B, claiming to use the same drain as an easement, and asking for the removal of the wall in question in the former suit, and B set up the judgment in the suit between himself and A as a bar to the suit,—Held that the right claimed by C, not being one which he and other inhabitants of the neighbourhood claimed under one common title, but a prescriptive right which he claimed individually in respect of his own house and premises and depending upon the length of time he had used the right, was a separate claim, and that the judgment in the suit between B and A did not operate as a bar to his suit. KALISHUNKUR DOSS v. GOPAL CHUNDER DUTT

608. ———— Right to use of water—Decision in former suit.—A decision in a former case, in which a mere question as to the use of the water in a water-course arose, cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent case, in which the subject-matter is whether the defendants have the right of throwing up an embankment and obstructing the water-way. MUNMOHUN SINGH v. AMBITNATH CHOWDHRY . . . W. R., 1864, 167

609. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 2—Suit on same cause of action—Suit to obtain right of way.—Where a suit for right of way was once thrown out on the specific ground that, according to plaintiff's own statement, the road in suit was a public one, and that the Court had no jurisdiction,—Held that, as the real cause of action—namely, the obstruction of the road—was not decided in the first trial, s. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not bar a second suit for the removal of the obstruction. NURKUN MUNDLE v. BORAMDY SIRDAR . . . 25 W. R., 208

610. ———— Right to fees for hereditary services—Decision in former suit.—In an action to recover fees claimed for services as an hereditary family and village priest, it appeared that a deceased brother of the plaintiff had recovered judgment against one of the defendants and others in an action for similar fees. Held that the former judgment was not conclusive in favour of the plaintiff, nor as against a brother of one of the original defendants. KRISHNAMBHAT BIN SHIVRAMBHAT v. LAKSHMANBHAT BIN GANESHBHAT . 1 Bom., 141

611. ———— Right to receive honours as priest of temple—Right decided in former suit.—Plaintiff sued to establish his right to receive certain honours in a temple as appertaining to his office of officiating priest of the temple, and to recover damages for the invasion of his right. In a former suit between the predecessor and the plaintiff and the first defendant, the claim to sit at the right side of the idol at festivals was admitted, but the right to receive a cake on the same occasion was disallowed. Held that the claim of the plaintiff, so far as it sought to establish the plaintiff's right, was res judicata. ARCHAKAM SRINIVASA DIKSHATULU v. UDAYAGIRY ANANTHA CHARLU . 4 Mad., 349

612. ———— Right to water for irrigation—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 13, expl. 5.—In 1881 A sued B, C, and others for damages for the loss of his crops by the diversion of a water-channel by the defendants. A claimed a right common to himself and other raiyats of his village to use the water during the day-time under an arrangement by which B, C, and the other defendants in the suit were entitled to use the water during the night time. In 1882 A and four other raiyats, not parties to the former suit, sued B, C, and thirteen others, not parties to the former suit, for a decree declaring that the plaintiffs were entitled to the exclusive use of the water in the channel by day. The lower Courts held that the suit was barred by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held that, as between the plaintiffs other than A and the defendants and as between A and the defendants other than B and C, the suit was not barred by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. *THANAKOTI v. [6 Moore's I. A., 348 : 4 W. R. P. C. 91]

4. ————— Suit for restitution by Mahomedan before payment of dower.—A suit will not lie by a Mahomedan to enforce the return of his wife to his house, even after consummation with consent, until her dower (prompt) has been paid. ABDOOL SHUKKOR v. RAHEEM-ODD-NISSA [6 N. W., 94]

5. ————— Suit by Mahomedan husband against wife—Procedure—Beng. Reg. IV of 1793, s. 15.—A Mahomedan husband may institute a suit in the Civil Courts of India to enforce his marital rights by compelling his wife against her will to return to cohabitation with him, and such suit must, under the imperative words of s. 15, Regulation IV of 1793, and the nature of the thing, be determined according to the principles of Mahomedan law. JUDOODNATH BOSE v. SHUMSOONISSA BEGUM, BUZLOOR RUHEEM v. SHUMSOONISSA BEGUM [8 W. R., P. C., 3; 11 Moore's I. A., 551]

6. ————— Hindu husband convert to Christianity.—A Hindu husband who has been repudiated by his wife on his conversion to Christianity cannot sue for the restitution of conjugal society. MUCHOO v. ARZOON SAHOO [5 W. R., 235]

7. ————— Mahomedan converted to Christianity.—Semble.—That where persons of Mahomedan faith are married according to the Mahomedan law, and either party becomes a convert to Christianity, a claim for restitution of conjugal rights cannot be supported. ZUBEDRUST KHAN v. HIS WIFE 2 N. W., 370

8. ————— Right to decree—Marriage complete except one ceremony which would have altered status of woman as to caste.—Where a man who had been married to a woman, but had failed to go through the second ceremony, without which, according to the customs of his caste, the woman would have been defiled had he obtained possession of her, and had actually married a second wife, and left the first woman to believe that she was at liberty to contract another marriage, which she did, brought a suit against her for restitution of conjugal rights.—Held that, though after a first marriage a man's right to the person of his wife was complete, yet where, as in the present case, there were other ceremonies which were usual, but had been neglected, and the claimant had not shown cause for his neglect, he was not entitled to a decree. BOOLCHAND KOLTA v. JANOKER 25 W. R., 388

9. ————— Custom as to child-wife living apart from husband till puberty.—Where it was the universal custom of the community to which the plaintiff belonged that a child-wife should remain away from her husband until a certain event had occurred, a Court was held to have been justified, while such contingency had not happened, in refusing to order such a wife to go to her husband, although the marriage was valid. SUNTOSH RAM Doss v. GHEU PATTUOK 23 W. R., 22

10. ————— Agreement to separate, Suit to set aside—Consent of wife.—Where a husband and wife (Hindus) thirteen years previously had agreed to separate, the husband having treated his wife with cruelty, and kept his sister-in-law as his mistress, and was still so keeping her at the date of the institution of the suit, and, further, had not contributed to the maintenance of his wife during the period of the separation.—Held that the husband was not entitled, without his wife's consent, to have that agreement set aside or to insist upon restitution of conjugal rights. MOOLA v. NUNDY [4 N. W., 109]

11. ————— Husband and wife—Suit by a husband—Marriage during wife's infancy—Non-consummation of marriage—Specific performance of contract of marriage made in infancy—Hindu law—Poverty of husband.—A, a Hindu, aged nineteen years, was married by one of the approved forms of marriage to B, then of the age of eleven years, with the consent of B's guardians. After the marriage, B lived at the house of her step-father, where A visited from time to time. The marriage was not consummated. Eleven years after the marriage,—viz., in 1884,—the husband called upon the wife to go to his house and live with him, and she refused. He thereupon brought the present suit, praying for restitution of conjugal rights, and that the defendant might be ordered to take up her residence with him. Held that the suit was not maintainable. DADAJI BHIKAJI v. RUKHMABAI [I. L. R., 9 Bom., 529]

Held on appeal, reversing the decree, that the suit was maintainable, and that the case should be remanded for a decision on the merits. DADAJI BHIKAJI v. RUKHMABAI I. L. R., 10 Bom., 301

12. ————— Plea of impossibility of sexual intercourse—Legal defences to suit for restitution—Discretion of Judge to refuse decree except when legal plea is proved—Husband and wife.—A plea by a wife that sexual intercourse with her is impossible owing to her incurable disease or physical malformation is not in itself a good defence to a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights. A Judge has no discretion to refuse a decree for restitution of conjugal rights for other causes than those which in law justify a wife from refusing to return to live with her husband, and he cannot abstain from passing a decree in favour of a plaintiff-spouse, because he considers that it would not be for the benefit of either side that the decree should be granted. Dadoji v. Rukhmabai, I. L. R., 10 Bom., 301, followed. Where therefore the lower Appellate Court found that there was no cruelty, but that the suit was brought by the husband as a counter-move to defeat the claim of his wife for separate maintenance, and a considerable time after she had ceased to live in his house, and because on the last occasion when she returned to live with him she left the house crying,—Held that these circumstances were not sufficient in law to justify the Court in refusing the husband's claim for

13. — Husband and wife—Hindu law—Suit by Hindu husband out of caste at time of suit—Decree for restitution conditional on plaintiff's obtaining restoration to caste.—In a suit by a Hindu, a Sunar by caste, against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, it was found that the plaintiff, in consequence of having left his wife and cohabited with a Mahomedan woman (whom, however, he had left at the time of suit), had been turned out of caste, but that the misconduct of which he had been guilty was not of such a character as to render him liable to perpetual excommunication, and upon making certain amends, he could obtain restoration to his caste. Held that, while the plaintiff was entitled to come into Court for the relief prayed, unless, in the circumstances above stated, the marriage had, under the Hindu law, been dissolved, the Court was bound, when asked to employing coercive process to compel a wife to return to her husband, not to disregard any reasonable objection she might raise to such process being granted, either on the ground that she had been subjected before to personal injury or cruelty at the hands of her husband, or that she went in fear of one or the other, or that the husband was actually living in adultery with another woman, or that, if she resumed cohabitation or association with him, he being outcasted, she would herself incur the risk of being put out of caste. Held therefore that in decreeing a claim of this description a Court was entitled, if it saw good reason to do so, while recognizing the civil rights of husband to his wife to put such conditions upon the enforcement of his rights by legal process as the circumstances of the case might fairly demand; and that, applying this principle to the present case, the defendant might reasonably ask the Court, before compelling her return to her husband, to make it a condition that he should first obtain his restoration to caste. Held also that, under the Hindu law, the fact that a husband had had adulterous intercourse with another woman, which had ceased at the time of suit, was not an answer to a claim by him for restitution of conjugal rights. PAIGI v. SHEONAHAIN

[I. L. R., 8 All, 78]

14. — Ground for suit—Mahomedan law—Dower—Lien of wife for dower.—In a suit brought by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights, the parties being Sunni Mahomedans governed by the Hanafi law, the defendant pleaded that the suit was not maintainable, as the plaintiff had not paid her dower-debt. The plaintiff thereupon deposited the whole of the dower-debt in Court. It appeared that the defendant's dower had been fixed without any specification as to whether it was to be wholly or partly prompt. It also appeared that she had attained majority before the marriage, and that she had cohabited with the plaintiff for three months after marriage, and there was no evidence that she had ever demanded payment of her dower before the suit was filed, or that she had refused cohabitation on the ground of non-payment. Besides the plea already mentioned, she also relied upon allegations of divorce and cruelty, but these allegations were found to be untrue. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not paid the dower-debt at the time when he brought his suit, he had no cause of action under the provisions of the Mahomedan law. Held by the Full Bench that the lower Appellate Court's view of the Mahomedan law relating to conjugal rights and the husband's obligation to pay dower was erroneous; and that the plaintiff, under the circumstances of the case, had a right to maintain the suit. ABDUL KADIR v. SALIMA. I. L. R., 8 All, 149

15. — Mahomedan law—Dower—Prompt dower—Stipulation as to residence.—In a suit by a Mahomedan husband for restitution of conjugal rights the defendant, his wife, pleaded first that he had entered into a stipulation at the time of the marriage to reside with her in the house of her father and that he had not done so; and secondly that he had not paid the exigible portion of the dower due to her, the marriage having been consummated. — Held as to the first point, upon the facts (after referring to the authorities, but without deciding whether a stipulation of this kind can be valid in any case), that the stipulation relied upon was not a sufficient answer to the plaintiff's claim. Held upon the authorities that the non-payment of prompt dower is not a sufficient plea in bar of such a suit. Abdul Kadir v. Salima, I. L. R., 8 All, 149, approved HAMDUNNESSA BIBI v. ZOHIRUDDIN SHEIK [I. L. R., 17 Calc., 670]

16. — Hindu law—Defence to suit—Cruelty of husband.—A suit for restitution of conjugal rights may be maintained by a Hindu: but quære if the same state of circumstances which would justify such a suit or which would be an answer to such a suit in the case of a European would be equally so in the case of a Hindu. Where cruelty on the part of the husband has been condoned by the wife, a much smaller measure of offence would be sufficient to neutralize the condonation than would have justified the wife, in the first instance, in separating from her husband. But the act or acts constituting the offence must be of such a nature as to give the wife just reason to suppose that the husband is about to renew his former course of conduct, and consequently to entertain well-founded apprehension for her personal safety. JOGENDRONUNDINI DOSSETT v. HURRY DOSS GHOSH

17. — Defence to suit—Cruelty of husband.—If the wife raise a defence of cruelty, she must prove violence of such a character as to endanger or cause a reasonable apprehension of danger to her personal health or safety. The ratio decidendi in such a case considered and laid down. JUDOO NATH BOSH v. SHUMSOONISSA BEGUM. BUZLOOR RUBEEM v. SHUMSOONISSA BEGUM

[8 W. R., P. C., 3; 11 Moore's I. A., 561]

18. ————— Husband and wife—Cruelty—Action for harbouring wife—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 200.—In a suit by a Hindu husband against his wife for the restitution of conjugal rights, the criterion of legal cruelty, justifying the wife's desertion, is the same in this country as in England, viz., whether there has been actual violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, or whether there is the reasonable apprehension of it. Every person who receives a married woman into his house, and suffers her to continue there after he has received notice from the husband not to harbour her, is liable to an action for damages or injunction, unless the husband has by his cruelty or misconduct forfeited his marital rights, or has turned his wife out of doors, or has, by some insult or ill-treatment, compelled her to leave him. YAMUNABAI v. NARAYAN MORESHWAR PENDSE [I. L. R., 1 Bom., 164]

19. ————— Suit by husband—Leprosy.—To a suit brought by a Hindu husband against his wife for the restitution of conjugal rights, the fact that he is at the time of such suit suffering from a loathsome disease, such as leprosy, is a good defence. BAI PREMDEVAR v. BHIKA KALLIANJI [5 Bom., A. C., 209]

20. ————— Divorce—Hindu law—Custom.—Where a Hindu sued his wife for restitution of conjugal rights and the defendant pleaded divorce, it was held that, though the Hindu law does not contemplate divorce, still in those districts where it is recognized as an established custom it would have the force of law. KUDOMER DOSSEK v. JOTERAM KOLITA . I. L. R., 3 Calc., 305

21. ————— Declaration of nullity of marriage—Divorce Act, s. 53.—It is competent to the Court in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights to make a declaration of nullity of marriage if the respondent shows himself entitled to such relief. LOPEZ v. LOPEZ . I. L. R., 12 Calc., 706

22. ————— Presumption of validity of marriage—Consent of lawful guardian—Non-performance of ceremonies.—The ceremony of nandimukh or bridhishradh is not an essential of Hindu marriage, nor would the want of consent by the lawful guardian necessarily invalidate such marriage. In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the fact of the celebration of marriage having been established, the presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, is that all the necessary ceremonies have been complied with. BRINDABUN CHUNDEA KURMOKAR v. CHUNDEA KURMOKAR [I. L. R., 12 Calc., 140]

23. ————— Form of decree—Order for restitution—Order for recovery of wife's person.—A Civil Court cannot pass a decree for the recovery of the person of a wife, the proper order being for the restitution of conjugal rights. MELARAM NUDIAL v. THANOORAM BAMUN . 9 W. R., 552

25. ————— Order enjoining wife to return to husband—Order to abstain from preventing her return.—In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights brought against a wife and certain persons said to be detaining her from her husband, the proper form of decree is one enjoining the wife to return to her husband, and the other co-defendants to abstain from preventing her return. *JAFFREY KHANUM v. The decree may order the wife to return to her husband's protection, but such a decree is not one which can be enforced in

31. — Decree under Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), s. 36—Enforcing decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 200.—A decree for restitution of conjugal rights under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act is enforceable only in the manner provided in s. 36 of the Act; such provision is in substitution of, and not in addition to, the ordinary remedies provided by s. 200 of the Code of Civil Procedure. *ABDESAR JAHANGIR FRAMJI v. 1. — Restitution of rights by motion where the appellate decree does not mention restitution—Execution pending appeal of decree set aside on appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 583.—Where a decree made by a Court of first instance is executed pending an appeal, and on appeal such decree is set aside, the appellant is entitled by motion to obtain restitution, even though the decree of the Court of appeal is silent as to such restitution. A, the owner of a 15 odd pie share of certain indigo land, brought a suit for partition against his co-sharer B, the owner of the rest of the land, and obtained a decree, from which B appealed. A, without waiting for the disposal of the appeal, executed his decree and obtained possession of his share, settling it with tenants. The decree was subsequently set aside on B's appeal, but no order as to restitution was made in it. Held, on motion by B, that he was entitled to be put into the same position as before the partition was made (i.e., joint possession with A) and to remove any tenants who refused to vacate. ROHNI SINGH v. HODDING . I. L. R., 21 Cal., 340

2. — Restitution of an advantage obtained by virtue of a decree of High Court subsequently reversed on appeal to Privy Council—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 583—Right of suit—Parties, Non-joinder of.—The holder of a decree of the High Court for costs assigned his rights under that decree. The assignee caused his name to be brought on to the record as transferee in place of the decree-holder, and he, and after him his legal representative, executed the decree against the judgment-debtor. The decree was appealed to the Privy Council, but the assignee was not a party to the record in that Court. The Privy Council reversed the decree. Thereupon the successful plaintiff applied under s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure to obtain restitution from the representative of the assignee of the amount realized in execution of the decree of the High Court. Held that, whether or not the amount realized by the assignee was recoverable by suit, it was not recoverable by proceedings under s. 583 of the Code, inasmuch as the assignee was no party to the decree of the Privy Council. BHAGWATI PRASAD v. JAMNA PRASAD

3. — Restitution of benefit obtained under a decree which is reversed in appeal—Restitution sought by means of execution of appellate decree against a person not a party to the appeal.—Held that appellants in the Privy Council who had, antecedently to filing their appeal to Her Majesty in Council, paid to the assignee of the decree appealed against, which was for costs only, the amount then payable under that decree could not, on succeeding in their appeal, obtain restitution, merely by virtue of and in execution of the order of Her Majesty in Council, of the amount so paid, from the assignee when that assignee had been no party to the appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Bhagwati Prasad v. Jamna Prasad, I. L. R., 19 All., 136, referred to. SADIQ HUSAIN v. LALTA PRASAD . I. L. R., 20 All., 139

4. — Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 583—Interest on amount so recovered.—Where, in consequence of a decree having been reversed on appeal, the decree-holder is entitled to recover under s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure any sum which before such decree was reversed he had been obliged to pay in execution of that decree, such decree-holder is entitled also to receive interest on the amount so recoverable. Rodger v. Comp-toir D'Escompte de Paris, L. R., 8 P. C., 465; Jaswant Singh v. Dip Singh, I. L. R., 7 All., 439; Ram Sahai v. Bank of Bengal, I. L. R., 8 All., 262; Bhagwan Singh v. Ummatul Harnain, I. 5. Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 583—Interest—Mesne profits.—Held that a person who is entitled under s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the restoration of a benefit of which he has been deprived by reason of a decree which has been subsequently reversed in appeal is entitled, if the thing to be restored is money, to interest for the time during which he has been deprived of the use of it, or, if the thing to be restored is land, to mesne profits for the time during which he has been kept out of possession. Phul Chand v. Shantar Sarup, I. L. R., 20 All., 430, approved. HARDAT c. IZZAT-UN-NISSA [I. L. R., 21 All., 1

6. Petition for restitution—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 583—Property taken from petitioner by process of Court under decree—Subsequent reversal of decree—Custody of third party—Principles on which restitution is ordered.—Two trustees of a temple having been removed from office, a suit was brought against them by the newly-appointed trustees and a decree obtained restraining them from interfering with the affairs of the temple. In accordance with that decree, property of the temple was taken from them by process of the Court and handed to the new trustees. On appeal to the High Court, however, the decree was reversed and restitution was now applied for by the survivor of the late trustees, from whom the property had been taken. In the meanwhile a third party had been appointed an additional trustee to the newly-appointed trustees. Held that the principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a judgment the law raises an obligation on the party to the record who received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost; and it is the duty of the Courts to enforce that obligation, unless it be shown that restitution would be clearly contrary to the real justice of the case. That with reference to the position of innocent third parties, the rule that a plaintiff in an action to recover land cannot, by his writ of restitution or assistance, dispossess a stranger to the proceeding holding possession on an independent title or claim of title and not in collusion with the defendant, does not apply where the party seeking to be restored to possession has been wrongfully dispossessed by the agency of the Court. Held therefore that the trustee who had been dispossessed must be given an opportunity to prove whether any and which of the temple properties were in his custody as alleged, and whether he was deprived of such custody under the decree which was reversed, and whether the newly-appointed trustees acquired the custody of them thereunder, and that, if substantiated, the claim for restitution could not be successfully resisted. *DORASAMI AYYAR c. 1. RIGHT TO RESUME.

1. Right to resume mokurari tenure—Death of grantor without heirs.—A mokurari tenure granted in perpetuity cannot be resumed by the grantor even if the grantee dies without heirs. HIMMUT BAHADOOR c. SOONEST KOER . . . 15 W. R., 549

2. Grant in lieu of maintenance—Limitation.—Although a grant of a mokurari lease in lieu of maintenance may be resumable by the grantor and his heirs, yet, if the grantor or any of his successors receives distinct notice of a claim on the part of the grantee to hold in perpetuity and not subject to resumption, and allows twelve years to go by without contesting such claim, he (such grantor or successor) will be barred for the time of his own enjoyment. PETAMBAR BABOO c. NILMONY SINGH DEO . I. L. R., 3 Calo., 798

3. Grant in lieu of maintenance—Hindu law—Alienation—Impartible estate.—The mere fact of the impartibility of an estate, or rather the mere fact that the succession to a zamindari is governed by the law of primogeniture, does not deprive the zamindar of his ordinary right to alienate it, or any portion of it, during his lifetime. Accordingly, an ordinary mokurari lease, granted by a zamindar of lands forming portion of a zamindari the succession to which is governed by the law of primogeniture, is valid, and the lands comprised in it cannot be resumed on the death of the grantor by his successor. But a mokurari khorposh, or allowance for maintenance, or an estate for life in lieu of maintenance, granted by the owner of a zamindari impartible by special custom, but otherwise subject to Bengal law, to a member of his family, is resumable

4. ——— Right to resume julkurs in navigable rivers—Beng. Reg. II of 1819.—A suit for resumption of julkurs in navigable rivers not forming part of settled estates is cognizable only in the ordinary Courts, (1) because of the total absence of the word "julkur" in any of the Resumption Regulations, either before or after Regulation II of 1819; and (2) by reason of the difference in the nature of the claims between one to take possession of julkur and one to resume lands. COLLECTOR OF MALDAH v. SUDUROODDEEN

5. ——— Right to resume jaghir—Alienation by grantee.—A zamindar cannot sue to resume a jaghir on the ground of its alienation by the grantee, so long as there are heirs male of the grantee existent. RAMESWAR NATH SING v. HARALAL SING

[I. B. L. R., A. C., 170]

6. ——— Right to resume permanent tenure—Forfeiture of tenure—Non-payment of Government revenue.—Where an ancient and permanent tenure is held by several persons in separate shares, and some of the sharers make default in the payment of their quota of the Government assessment, the portion of the tenure held by the sharers who paid their shares of the assessment cannot be resumed or forfeited by the Government. In such a case the onus lies on the Government to make out by clear evidence under what special contract, or agreement, or regulation, it forfeits the entire tenure. BRETT v. ELLAIYA

8. ——— Right to resume Neemuk Sayer mehals—Beng. Regs. VIII and XXVII of 1793—Right of Government as Sovereign.—The resumption by Government of Neemuk Sayer mehals (saltpetre-duty estates) upheld, the sanads of the Subadar of Behar, the ruling power previous to the Company's accession to the Dewanny, purporting to grant the Government as mokurari istemrari at a permanent fixed rent, being declared forgeries. Quere—Whether the Neemuk Sayer mehals being a sayer right was not wholly abolished by Bengal Regulation XXVII of 1793, and the Bengal Government in its Sovereign character had not an absolute right to resume. 5 Moore's I. A., 467

9. ——— Right to resume subordinate tenure by istemrardar—Customary right.—A custom was alleged entitling a Patwi Thakur, or chief belonging to the Rathor clan of Rajputs, who was the istemrardar of an ancient and impartible talukh in Ajmere, to resume land formerly part of it, but granted some generations back as a subordinate estate to a collateral relation of the chief. The ground of the resumption claimed was that the last successor to the estate so granted had died without issue and without adopting. Held that the Commissioner's judgment, which was that a right of resumption exercisable merely on the above ground had not been established, was correct, being supported to some extent certainly by answers received by the Chief Commissioner on enquiry from the neighbouring durbars of Rajputana chiefs, and on the whole, by the balance of the evidence. RAO BAHADUR SINGH v. JOWAHIR KUAB

10. ——— Right of masafidar—Recognition of right to resume—Limitation—Cause of action.—Held that mere recognition of right to resume contained in the wajib-ul-urz, where the grant existed many years previous to the date of that document, does not re-grant to a masafidar so as to give plaintiff a new starting point from which his right to resume should date. DAYUM KHAN v. TUNSOOKH RAI

[2 Agra, 189]

11. ——— Right of manager of religious endowment—Beng. Reg. XIX of 1793.—The manager of a religious endowment consisting of the profits of a number of villages after paying revenue, was not a zamindar under Regulation XIX of 1793, and could not sue for resumption of invalid lakhiraj land. NOBIN CHUNDER ROY CHOWDERY v. PRABHU KHANUM

12. ——— Right of talukhdars—Limit of area in suit for resumption.—Talukhdars had no legal right to sue for resumption of areas containing more than 100 bighas of land. GOPAL CHUNDER ROY v. OODHUB CHUNDER MULLICK

[W. R., 1864, 156]

13. ——— Right of Government as agent for samindar—Limit of area in suit for resumption.—The Government, when acting as agent of a samindar, could only sue to resume invalid lakhiraj lands under 100 bighas. RAM LOOHUN SINGH v. DEMONATH PAUL

2 W. R., 279

14. ——— Right of samindar—Presumption—Land held under different sanads—Limit of area in suit for resumption.—When land beyond 100 bighas in extent is admittedly held by a lakhirajdar, the presumption is that it is held under one grant, and that it is resumable by Government, and not by the zamindar. To rebut the presumption, the zamindar must show that the land, though beyond 100 bighas in extent, is held under different sanads. JOGENDRO NARAIN ROY v. HURRY DOSS ROY

[W. R., 1864, 145]

15. ——— Right of zamindar to assess and resume invalid lakhiraj tenures—Limit of area in suit for resumption.—When a zamindar engaged to pay a certain amount of revenue on certain lakhiraj lands, on condition of Government stopping resumption proceedings in respect to such lands, he had a right under that engagement to resume invalid rent-free tenures below 100 bighas in extent, whatever had been the nature of agreement with Government in previous years, but he had no right to resume lands of greater extent than 100 bighas covered by one sanad. BEER CHUNDER JOOBRAJ v. 16. ——— Beng. Reg. II of 1809, s. 30—Limit of area in suit for resumption.—To bar a zamindar's right to resume, as invalid lakhiraj under s. 30, Regulation II of 1809, lands in excess of 100 bighas, it must be shown that the lands are held under a sanad in excess of 100 bighas, or under different sanads, each in excess of 100 bighas. MAHOMED MUNSOOR v. UMBICA CHURN ROY

[W. R., 1864, 132]

17. ——— Beng. Reg. XIX of 1793—Limit of area in suit for resumption.—A zamindar is not precluded by Regulation XIX of 1793 from suing for the resumption of invalid lakhiraj lands exceeding 100 bighas held under several sanads, provided none of them singly is a grant for more than 100 bighas. The release of lands covered by one such sanad from the claim of Government to resume, on the ground that they were under 50 bighas, does not bar the zamindar's right to resume them. ELIAS v. MAHOMED PREZBER

[W. R., 1864, 217]

18. ——— Beng. Reg. X of 1793, s. 19—Limitation in suit for resumption.—A zamindar suing for resumption of alleged invalid lakhiraj land under s. 19, Regulation X of 1793, was not limited to time, provided he could prove that, at some time subsequent to the decennial settlement, the land sought to be resumed was part of his māl estate, and had paid rent. GOPAL CHUNDER SHAHA v. 2. PROCEDURE.

19. ——— Assessment of resumed lands—Beng. Reg. XIX of 1793—Beng. Reg. II of 1819, s. 30—Suit for rent.—Unless the holder of a resumption-decree took steps under Regulation XIX of 1793 to have the revenue fixed by the Collector, and the defendant consented to pay the revenue required of him, he had no locus standi on holding the lands to bring suits for rent. The rule to be followed in determining in what manner and under what regulation the assessment of resumed lakhiraj land should be conducted was, first, to ascertain whether the existence of the lakhiraj prior to 1791 had been decided by the decree for resumption. It could not be presumed that every case instituted under s. 30, Regulation II of 1819, dealt with an estate which was held lakhiraj prior to 1791. POGOSE v. EKRAM HOSSAIN

15 W. R., 483

20. ——— Question of validity of grant—Limitation—Existence of tenure before 1790.—In a suit for resumption, where the defendant pleads a lakhiraj tenure before 1790, the validity of the grant is not open to the Judge's consideration, but only whether the tenure was in existence before 1790, and if so to apply the law of limitation. SAGORE MONNE DOSSER v. BIPRO DOSS DEY

1 W. R., 249

21. ——— Limitation—Beng. Reg. II of 1819, s. 30—Lakhiraj—Beng. Reg. XIX of 1793, s. 10.—A suit for resumption under s. 30, Regulation II of 1819, must be assumed to refer only to lakhiraj created prior to the 1st of December 1790, and therefore was not exempt from limitation under s. 10, Regulation XIX of 1793. HEERA MONNE DABEE v. 24. ——— Beng. Reg. II of 1819, s. 16—Omission to give notice.—Where the resumption officer, as directed by s. 16, Regulation II of 1819, supplied the defendant in a resumption suit with a copy of his reasons for considering the lands in question liable to resumption, and subsequently, in the absence of the defendant, declared the lands liable to assessment,—Held that, as defendant failed to appear either in person or by agent, it was impossible for the resumption officer to give him the warning mentioned in s. 16 of the same law, and the legality of the proceedings was not affected by the omission. BURUDA KANT ROY v. COMMISSIONER OF THE SOONDURBUNS

RESUMPTION—continued.2. PROCEDURE—concluded.

25. ——— Right to intervene in suit — Beng. Regs. II of 1819 and III of 1828—Decree of Special Commissioners.—In a suit by Government under Regulation II of 1819 to resume invalid lakhiraj land held by a mohunt, as the interests of the zamindar, who claimed a portion of the lands sought to be assessed, as forming part of his permanently-assessed estate, were liable to be affected by the decision of the Collector,—Held that he had a right to intervene and become a party to the suit, and to prefer an appeal from the decree. The decree of the Special Commissioners under Regulation III of 1828 was final, if no appeal or petition of review was presented within a reasonably sufficient period. MOHESUR SINGH v. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA [8 W. R., P. C., 45; 7 Moore's I. A., 283]

3. EFFECT OF RESUMPTION.

26. ——— Finality of proceedings—Injury to parties—Diluvion.—Resumption proceedings are final and not liable to question by the Civil Courts. But when proceedings take place in the nature of extensive settlements with other parties after intermediate and temporary settlements, and acts are done wholly without jurisdiction, or lands are taken not included in the original decree, there should be a remedy to parties deeming themselves to have been wronged thereby. If lands adjudged to Government in a resumption suit diluviate and re-form on the same site, Government does not thereby lose its rights to them, nor is it obliged to institute wholly new proceedings. Diluvion does not create any new right. COLLECTOR OF DACCA v. KISHEN KISHORE CHATTERJEE. JUGO BUNDOO BOSE v. COLLECTOR OF DACCA W. R., 1864, 273

27. ——— Finality of resumption-decree—Settlement proceedings—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—The ruling of the late Sudder Court as to the final and conclusive character of a resumption-decree was held not to apply to what was subsequently done administratively by a settlement officer, the proper distinction being that the decree of the Resumption Court as to the liability of the resumed mehal to be assessed with a Government demand is final; but the subsequent dealing by the settlement officer with alleged proprietary right and claim to land not mentioned in the decree, is open to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. MAHOMED GAZEE CHOWDERY v. LALL BEBER 10 W. R., 108
RAM CHUNDER SHAHA v. COLLECTOR OF MUMBAI 22 W. R., 48

28. ——— Effect on contract between zamindar and tenant—Resumption of lakhiraj tenure by Government—Under-tenants, Rights of.—The mere resumption of a lakhiraj tenure by Government does not dissolve the contract between the zamindar and tenant. The tenant has the option to determine his tenancy, or he may consent that the amount of revenue which the landlord must pay to Government, or a portion of it, shall be added to his original jumma. FARZANA BANU v. AZIZUNNISA BIBI [B. L. R., Supp. Vol., 175; 3 W. R., 72]

29. ——— Effect on tenant—Illegal assessment of revenue—Mad. Reg. XXVII of 1802.—In a suit against a Collector for an illegal seizure and subsequent usurpation of plaintiff's share in an aghaharam village for non-payment of tirvai due from other tenants of the village, and to recover the increased tirvai imposed by the Collector,—Held that the plaintiff's right to enjoy his share of the village lands under the original pottah was not legally determined by resumption; and that, continuing liable only to the fixed rent, the plaintiff was entitled to the return of the amount paid under compulsion, in excess of such rent, at the date of the suit. MADRAS REGULATION XXVII of 1802 considered. KELLAIYA v. COLLECTOR OF SALEM . . . 8 Mad., 59

Affirmed by the Privy Council on appeal in BENT v. KELLAIYA [13 Moore's I. A., 104; 12 W. R., P. C., 33]

30. ——— Effect on howladar—Rights of howladars.—The resumption by Government of a parent estate did not nullify the existing rights of a howladar within the estate, or deprive him of the benefit of the presumption arising under s. 16 of Act X of 1859. MOTHOORA NATH GUNGOADHYA v. SHEETA MONEE 9 W. R., 364

31. ——— Effect on sub-tenure—Sub-tenures before decennial settlement.—A sub-tenure created before, and in existence at the time of, the decennial settlement cannot be invalidated by any subsequent settlement of the mehal in which it is situated. Resumption of lakhiraj land under the revenue law does not destroy any such sub-tenure in the estate resumed. ABDOOL ALI v. RANGUTTY [12 W. R., 196]

32. ——— Effect on lakhirajdars—Rights of lakhirajdars—Settlement—Cause of action.—A resumption-decree does not destroy the proprietary right of the lakhirajdars, which continues unless and until they are dispossessed in due course of law. By obtaining a permanent settlement they acquire no new right; a cause of action accruing to them if ousted before settlement. THAKOOR DASS ROY CHOWDERY v. NUBEN KISHEN GHOSH [15 W. R., 562]

33. ——— Effect on charitable trust—Omission of mention of existence of charitable trust or endowment.—The resumption of lands by Government, and the making a fresh settlement of the resumed lands without any allusion to their being held in trust for charitable purposes prior to the resumption proceedings, are not conclusive proof that there was no such trust. The only question decided by the Government in resuming was that those who claimed the land as lakhiraj had not been able to prove that the land was held under any such religious or charitable trust as would debar Government from resuming. LEELANUND SINGH BARADOOR v. ISHUREN NUNDUN DUTT JHA . . . 8 W. R., 316

34. ——— Effect on rights acquired previous to resumption—Liability of purchaser of rent-free holding to pay rent or revenue.—Where the plaintiff's ancestor purchased a certain quantity of land from a rent-free holder of the mouzah, who on the resumption of the maafi tenure by Government was admitted to a proprietary settlement of the mouzah and acquired a good prescriptive title.—Held that the resumption by the Government did not affect the right which the plaintiff's ancestor had previously acquired in the land, and the land not having been assessed with revenue by the Government, the plaintiff could not be treated as a mere cultivator, and liable to pay either rent or revenue. AHMED v. GUNAISH PERSHAD 2 Agra, 9

35. ——— Effect on right of collection or profits—Maafi lands.—Where maafi lands are, after resumption and assessment, left in the possession of the ex-maafidars, the persons entitled to collection or profits are, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, the ex-maafidars, and not the lambardar of the village. DAL CHUND v. SRETA KOONWAR 2 Agra, 152

36. ——— Liability to pay rent—Resumption and assessment by settlement officer.—Where land is resumed and assessed by a settlement officer, the tenant is bound to pay rent at the rate assessed by the settlement officer. WOOMANATH ROY CHOWDEY v. DEBNATH ROY CHOWDEY

[14 W. R., 471]

D'SILVA v. RAJ COOMAR DUTT 16 W. R., 153

37. ——— Effect on mortgagees under sur-i-peshgi lease—Omission to call in advance—Acquiescence in liability of profits for revenue.—When property granted in a sur-i-peshgi lease was originally rent-free, but subsequently resumed and assessed by Government, the mortgagees was held bound either to make a fresh agreement to take the profits, minus the Government revenue, as his security, or to call in his money. His not adopting either course for a long period was construed into assent on his part to receive the profits, minus the Government revenue, as security. JOY PROKASH NARAIN v. MADHA KISHEN W. R., 1864, 227

38. ——— Effect of resumption and settlement of lakhiraj on the holder of a mokurari lease from the lakhirajdar—Lakhiraj tenure—Settlement of invalid lakhiraj.—Assessment of revenue by Government on invalid lakhiraj land after resumption does not confer a new estate on the lakhirajdar, and does not cancel or extinguish a mokurari lease granted by the lakhirajdar previous to the settlement, and during the time he was in possession of the land as lakhiraj. PRATAP NARAYAN MOOKERJEE v. MADHU SUDAN MOOKERJEE

39. ——— Effect of resumption on mortgages created by inamdar—Inam lands.—An inamdar, having granted several mortgages upon his inam lands, died. The right to hold the lands rent-free was ruled by Government to have ceased upon the death, but the inam was continued to his representatives, subject to the payment of assessment, under the Government circular of 1-54. Held that the original estate in the lands was not destroyed; that no new title in the inamdar's representatives was created; and that the lands continued chargeable in their hands with any valid specific liens created upon them by the inamdar. VISHNU TRIMBAK v. TATIA alias VASUDEY PANT 1 Bom., 23

40. ——— Effect on inamdar—Inam—Landlord and tenant.—On the resumption of an inam, the inamdar's right to exemption from the payment of the Government assessment ceases, and the inamdar becomes liable to pay such assessment; but all his other rights remain unaffected, and therefore those who were his tenants before the resumption do not thereby cease to be so, and can be ejected if they are not permanent tenants or are not otherwise entitled to remain in possession. GANGABHAI v. KALAPA DARI MUKRYA I. L. R., 9 Bom., 419

41. ——— Resumption of inam village, and re-grant, Effect of—Acts of State—Waikars Status of—Treaties of 1820—Effect of grant of inam under construction—Attachment by Government of such village, Effect of.—From the year 1820 down to the year 1872, the Waikar family had been in the enjoyment of the village of Pasarni under a treaty between the East India Company and one M. A and K M were brothers and the last male descendants of M. For an alleged fraud of K M Government restricted the enjoyment of the said village to his lifetime only. A predeceased K M. On the death of K M, Government, on the 31st December 1872, placed an attachment over the village. On the 13th July 1874 a judgment-creditor of A caused the lands in dispute, which were mirasi lands of the Waikar family situated at Pasarni, to be sold in execution of his decree against A, and they were purchased by the defendant, who was put in possession on the 22nd April 1876. In the meanwhile, Government, having chosen to recognize the plaintiff as a representative of the Waikar family, had removed the attachment, and re-granted the village to the plaintiff shortly before, viz., on the 3rd April 1878. The plaintiff, being dispossessed, sued the defendant, contending (inter alia) that A, having predeceased his brother, had no interest in the lands, which had been purchased by the defendant. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim, and directed the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who was of opinion that the proceedings of Government since the attachment in 1872 and restoration of the village were acts of State, and he varied the decree of the lower Court by cutting down the plaintiff's costs, made payable by the lower Court's decree, to half. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court.—Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the plaintiff's claim should be dismissed. The attachment placed by Government on the death of K M in December 1872 was limited to an exemption from assessment, and the resumption and re-grant to the plaintiff did not give the plaintiff any title to the lands in question. The proceedings of Government in 1873 and 1876, by which the plaintiff was recognized as the representative of the Waikar family, were not acts of State. The status of the Waikars and other persons, with whom the agreements of 1820 were entered into, was not that of an independent sovereign. They (the Waikars) were merely powerful saranjamdars subordinate to the Raja of Satara, and after the annexation of the territory of the Raja in 1849 they held their lands under the East India Company. Secretary of State for India v. Narayan Balbhant Bhoole, Printed Judgments for 1883, p. 244. HARI SADASHIV v. AJMUDIN . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 235

42. ——— Resumption of saranjam by British Government, Effect of, on position and rights of the saranjamdar—Occupancy rights of a saranjamdar—Inam, Resumption of—Public and private property of an absolute chief—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy created by chief prior to resumption of land by Government—Effect of resumption on rights of landlord—Adverse possession—Recognition of tenant by Government officers, as occupant paying assessment, does not prejudice landlord's rights.—A, the Chief of Kagvad, let certain land to the defendant for a term of twelve years by a lease dated 12th June 1857. A died in the same year without male issue, and his saranjam was resumed by the British Government. In 1858 the Collector treated the defendant as occupant of the land in question for the purposes of assessment, and again in 1860 entered his name as occupant in the Government books. In January 1868 the widow of A adopted the plaintiff as his son. In 1881 the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of the land let to the defendant in 1857. The defendant contended that the land was not the private land of A, but belonged to the State of Kagvad, which was resumed on his death by the Government; and that the plaintiff's claim was barred by the law of limitation. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the land was the private property of A, and that the claim was not barred. The District Judge, on appeal, held that the land was not the private property of the Chief, but was the property of the State, and that, on the resumption of the State by the British Government, the defendant's lease came to an end, and the relation of landlord and tenant, previously existing between the Chief and the defendant, ceased. He also held that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation, and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that no distinction could be drawn between the public and private property of an absolute chief, which A was. That, in the absence of a contrary intention, the resumption by the British Government of a saranjam or inam leaves the occupancy rights of the saranjamdar or inamdar untouched; that a saranjamdar or inamdar may acquire occupancy rights during the continuance of the saranjam or inam. Held also that the fact that the revenue officers placed the defendant's name in the Government books as the

4. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

43. ——— Illegal resumption by Government—Liability to account.—The Government having seized certain chur lands and dispossessed the proprietor in possession, and having entirely failed to establish any claim for assessment or resumption during the period of attachment following the dispossession of the proprietor,—Held that the Government must be regarded as a wrong-doer for the whole period, and must account to the proprietor for all the collections made by its officers up to the time of the restitution. *SURNOMOYEE v. 45. ——— Purchases before resumption—Jagir.—Where the evidence showed that certain arms and stores seized had been purchased by the jaghirdar before the resumption, and there was no authority or evidence to show that those who held by jaidad were not entitled to things so purchased,—Held that the representatives of the jaghirdar were entitled to recover the value of the arms and stores so seized. *FORESTER v. He was represented by a pleader at the adjourned hearing. He subsequently applied for the re-admission of the suit on the ground that he had been prevented by illness from depositing the money. Held that the application should not have been treated as one under s. 119, Civil Procedure Code, but might fairly be regarded as an application for review of judgment under s. 376, and in that view the misconstruction by the Munsif of the nature of the application was not a sufficient reason for depriving the plaintiff of the relief which he not inequitably obtained by the order passed in it; and the Court of first instance was directed to call on the plaintiff to pay the fee payable on his application for a review of judgment, and in the event of his complying with the requisition, to give effect to the Munsif's order for re-admission of the suit. RAM SUNDAR SINGH v. 26. ——— Order of Revenue Commissioner setting aside sale—Public Demands Recovery Act (Beng. Act VII of 1880)—Beng. Act VII of 1868—Review of order setting aside sale.—A revenue-paying talukh was sold for arrears of dak cess under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The sale was set aside on appeal by the Revenue Commissioner, but on an application for review made to his successor, the sale was confirmed, and the purchaser took possession. In a suit to recover possession of an 8 annas share of the talukh on the grounds, among others, that the order on review was passed without jurisdiction and without notice to the plaintiffs, and as such conferred no title on the purchaser, the District Judge, on appeal, held that the order on review, not having been set aside, remained in force, but he remanded the case under s. 566 for trial of the question of notice. On the case coming back to the Appellate Court before another Judge, he held the order on review to be ultra vires and the trial of the question of notice to be unnecessary. The defendants preferred a second appeal against the last judgment. Held that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to reviews of judgment were not extended to proceedings under Bengal Acts VII of 1868 and VII of 1880, and that, in the present case, the order passed on review, confirming the sale, was ultra vires and of no effect. LALA PRYAG LAL v. The special appellant then applied to the lower Appellate Court for a review of its judgment on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence. This application was admitted, and a review of the judgment was allowed. 38. ———— Decree properly made against minor—Right of minor to impeach decree on attaining majority—Form of decrees against minor—Practice—Procedure.—A testator in his will directed his daughter-in-law L (defendant No. 1) to adopt his nephew K (defendant No. 2), and he devised the residue of his estate to him. The executors of the will subsequently brought this suit to have the will construed and the rights of K in the testator's estate ascertained and declared. A decree was made on the 1st October 1887, by which it was declared that K's adoption was a condition precedent to his inheritance, and that, unless he was adopted, he was not entitled to any part of the testator's property. On the 22nd October 1894 K filed a petition of review, stating that at the date of the decree he was a minor and had only recently, viz., on the 14th December 1894, attained the age of eighteen years. He contended that there was error apparent on the face of the decree, inasmuch as it did not provide that he should have an opportunity of showing cause against it in so far as it affected his interest after he attained his majority. Held that the review could not be granted. The Courts in India, after deciding an issue in which an infant, party to suit, is interested, have no power to reserve to the infant the right of questioning such decision. At all events, a decree is not erroneous for not containing such a provision when the issue in which the infant is interested has been fully gone into and argued before the Court. A decree passed against an infant properly represented is binding upon him like a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the infant to impeach such decree by a suit in cases where his guardian has been guilty of fraud or negligence in allowing the decree to be passed against him. CUS-SANDAS NATHA v. The provision in s. 626 of the Code of Civil Procedure that a Judge granting an application for a review "shall record with his own hand his reasons for such opinion," is directory, and an order is not necessarily invalidated by the fact that the reasons are not recorded, though there may be cases in which it is necessary in the interests of justice that the reasons should be recorded, and in such cases the record would be essential to the validity of the order. *Gyannand Asram v. One of the defendants, who, it appeared, had not been served with notice of the previous application for review, subsequently applied to the Special Judge to review his decree, and that application was granted on the ground that the applicant had not had notice of the former review. On this subsequent review the Special Judge discovered that he had made a mistake with reference to the date of certain documents, and that this mistake had led him to a wrong conclusion upon the merits of the case. He consequently reversed his former order and dismissed the suit, confirming the original decree of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882). Held that in granting a re-hearing the Special Judge had exercised a reasonable discretion with which the High Court could not interfere in its extraordinary jurisdiction. The Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to proceedings before the Special Judge, and the conduct of such proceedings rests within his discretion. Badari-charya v. Ramchandra Gopal Savant, I. L. judgment.—As a general rule, the Court which pronounces a judgment is the only Court that can review that judgment. RAM NATH v. GOWHUR [3 N. W., 230]

57. ——— Hearing of application by different Judge when allowable.—Delay.—A review was intended to be a consideration of the same subject by the same Judge, as distinguished from an appeal, which is a hearing before another tribunal. A review therefore should be presented with as much expedition as possible with a view to the re-hearing before the same Judge. The exceptions to this rule are allowable only ex necessitate, that is, from death of the original Judge or some unexpected and unavoidable cause which prevents him from hearing the review. The causes accounting for delay in applying for a review must, to justify the grant of it, be of grave importance. MOHESHW SINGH v. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA under a decree to abide the result of an appeal to the Privy Council from a former decree on which it is based—Application to recover the money on the reversal of the former decree.—By a deed of sale, dated 9th May 1858, certain lands belonging to a minor talukhdar were sold by his mother and natural guardian to the plaintiffs' father. The lands were described as nakri (i.e., held free of assessment), and the sale-deed provided that in case the vendee were at any future time compelled to pay assessment to Government in respect of the nakri lands, the vendor would recoup the vendee for any payment so made. In 1872 Government for the first time levied assessment on the nakri lands. In 1876 the plaintiff filed a suit against the talukhdar to recover the amount of assessment paid by them in respect of the nakri lands for the years 1872–76. The High Court passed a decree in plaintiffs' favour in March 1883. Against this decree the talukhdar appealed to the Privy Council. In April 1883 the plaintiffs filed a second suit on the same cause of action to recover from the talukhdar the amount of assessment levied on the nakri lands for the years 1877–82. In this suit a decree was passed against the talukhdar solely on the strength of the High Court's decree in the former suit. In execution of this decree, the plaintiffs attached the talukhdar's property. Thereupon the talukhdar deposited in Court the amount due under the decree, and applied to the Court for removal of the attachment, and for stay of further proceedings in execution pending the disposal of his appeal to the Privy Council in the former suit. This application was granted. In March 1887 the Privy Council decided the appeal in favour of the talukhdar, and reversed the High Court's decree. Thereupon the talukhdar applied for a refund of the money he had deposited in Court. The Court suggested that his proper remedy was by an application for review of the decree in the second suit. The talukhdar accordingly presented a petition of review. This petition was rejected by the District Judge, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to grant a review of his predecessor's decision, except on the grounds set forth in s. 624 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held that the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the application for review. The decision of the Privy Council, reversing the decree of the High Court in the first suit, having been passed subsequently to the decree in the second suit, which depended on the reversed decree of the High Court, was "new and important matter" within the meaning of ss. 623 and 624 of the Code of Civil Procedure. WAGHELA RAISANGJI SHIVSANGJI v. 5. GROUNDS FOR REVIEW.

74. . . . Good and sufficient reason—Change of incumbent of office of Judge.—A Court has the power, for any reason that it may consider good and sufficient, to grant a review of its judgment; and if the application is made within ninety days, the Court's estimate of those reasons cannot be interfered with by an Appellate Court. The procedure is not different when there has been a change (during the ninety days) of office incumbents. MONTORA v. ARLEK ROY . . . 11 W. R., 187

75. . . . Unfairness of decision—Power to admit review.—When once a Civil Court has passed a final decision between the parties, it loses jurisdiction over the suit, except for the purposes of executing the decree; and it cannot hold a new trial of the same unless, for some reason within the Procedure Act, the first trial appears to have been unfair between the two parties. LULEET MOHUN ROY CHOWDREY v. An application for review of judgment was made on two grounds, viz., (i) that the Bench was wrong in thinking that such issue had not been determined by the Court of first appeal; and (ii) that the Bench, sitting as a Court of second appeal, was not empowered to determine an issue of fact which the Court of first appeal had omitted to determine, but should have referred such issue to that Court for determination under s. 566 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that, looking to the provisions of that Code relating to review of judgment, such application ought not to be allowed on the grounds mentioned, which virtually disclosed reasons for appeal from the judgment. *SHEO RATAN v. REVIEW—continued.5. GROUNDS FOR REVIEW—continued.

89. ——— Opportunity to re-argue case—Chance of altering decision.—A review cannot be given merely for the purpose of allowing the parties to re-argue the case upon the evidence, upon the chance of eventually throwing doubt upon the decision already passed. KOLEMOODDEEN MUNDUL v. HERRUN MUNDUL . . . 24 W. R., 188

90. ——— Error in decision—Additional evidence.—Where a Subordinate Judge admitted a review on the representation of plaintiff that he (the Judge) had made a mistake as to the subject of a certain dagh in a Government halabadee chitta, the applicant filing with his petition for review another chitta and other evidence for the purpose of convincing the Court that it had made an error,—Held that an error of this kind was sufficient to found the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the review. GUNESH RAM SURMAH v. ROHINEE DASSEE . . . 14 W. R., 238

91. ——— Erroneous refusal to admit additional evidence.—Where a Judge on appeal declined to admit additional evidence, on the ground that the application should have been made to the lower Court,—Held it was a ground for applying for a review of his order pointing out his mistake. RAM LALL v. RUNG LALL . . . 17 W. R., 47

92. ——— Decision of special appeal on ground not taken in lower Courts—Review of special appeal.—It is not a sufficient ground for a review of judgment passed on special appeal that the point which was then raised, and on which the Court's decision was based, was one not raised in either of the lower Courts, and especially, as in this case, where the question was pointedly raised in the special appeal and the respondent had ample time to prepare himself to meet the statement therein. COWELL v. MOHADEB MUNDUL . . . 17 W. R., 182

93. ——— Necessity of review for ends of justice—Omission to raise issue.—A case having been remanded for the trial of an issue under the specific provisions of cl. 1, s. 4, Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, an application for review was made on the ground that it was requisite for the ends of justice to remand the case upon an issue under cl. 2, which, it was alleged, was the issue to which the applicant had directed all his evidence. Held that, as the correctness of this allegation could not be ascertained without going through the record again, the application could not be granted, for to grant it would, in fact, be to grant a second special appeal, which is not the object of a review. JUGGOBUNDHOO BOSE v. 94. ——— Later Privy Council decision—Facts not fully placed before Court.—A review cannot be granted on the ground that, if the facts had been better or more fully placed before the Court, the judgment would have been different, or even on the ground of a subsequent decision of a question of law by the Privy Council in another suit where there has been no discovery of new evidence

96. ——— New contrary ruling—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 623.—Although the discovery of a new ruling may not entitle a party to a review of judgment, yet when a Court is satisfied that its judgment has proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law, the provisions of s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure allow a review of judgment. VELLAYA v. JAGANATHA . I. L. R., 7 Mad., 307

99. ——— Errors of law—Law, Mistaken view of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 623.—A review of judgment may be granted (if it is necessary for the ends of justice that the judgment should be reviewed) where there is an error of law on the face of the judgment, or where the decision of the Court has proceeded upon a mistaken view of the law. Rewa Mahton v. which governed the case, but which had not been urged at the previous hearing, it was considered that the applicant was not to blame for his omission to bring the decision to the notice of the Court at the first hearing, and the application for review of judgment was granted. ACHUTA v. MAMMAVU

[I. L. R., 10 Mad., 357]

101. ———— “Any other sufficient reason”—Civil Procedure Code, s. 623 Power to grant review.—S. 623 gives a more extensive right of review than existed in England, where a review could only be obtained by showing that there was apparent on the record error in law, or that new and relevant matter had been discovered after the judgment which could not possibly have been used when the judgment was given, or that judgment was obtained by fraud. The words “or for any other sufficient reason” mean that the reason must be one sufficient to the Court or Judge to whom the application for review is made, and they cannot be held to be limited to the discovery of new and important matter or evidence or the occurring of a mistake or error apparent on the record. Whether or not there is in such cases “any other sufficient reason” may depend on a question of law or a question of fact, or a mixed question of law and fact. Reasat Hosein v. Hadjee Abdullah, I. L. R., 2 Cal., 131, referred to. In cases where a stay of execution or an injunction is granted on an ex-parte application, liberty to apply to the Judge to vary or set aside his order must be implied, if not expressed. Fritz v. Hobson, L. R., 14 Ch. Div., 542, referred to. On the 29th July 1886 an application was made by a party against whom the High Court, on second appeal, had passed a decree dated the 18th March 1816, for review of judgment. On the 28th August the applicant made a further application that execution of the decree might be stayed pending the determination of the application for review, and an order was passed ex parte granting this application. Subsequently the opposite party applied under s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code for a review of the ex-parte order on the grounds (i) that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it, and (ii) that the application of the 29th July was beyond time, and therefore there could be no review of judgment, and no order for stay of execution pending such review. Held that the Court had power, under s. 623 of the Code, to review the ex-parte order of the 28th August, and that such order had been made without jurisdiction and ought to be reviewed. Held that, having regard to the circumstances that the order of the 28th August was made without jurisdiction, and upon an ex-parte application, of which the opposite party had no notice, and interfered perhaps indefinitely with his right to obtain the money in Court under the final and unappealable decree in his favour, as to which no application for review had been granted, and that the application for review of judgment was made after the statutory period of ninety days had expired, and contained no explanation of the delay, sufficient reason for reviewing the order of the 28th August had been shown. *AMIE HABAN v. REVIEW—continued.5. GROUNDS FOR REVIEW—continued.

102. ———— Civil Procedure Code, s. 623—Omission to serve notice of hearing of appeal on applicant—Practice—Notice to show cause—Right to begin.—An appeal which was referred to the Full Bench for disposal was heard and determined by the Full Bench, and judgment given in favour of the appellant in the absence of the respondent. Subsequently the respondent applied for a review of judgment, and proved that his absence at the hearing before the Full Bench was due to a mistake which had been made in not serving him with notice of the reference. Held by the Full Bench that under the circumstances the applicant's absence at the hearing came within the words “any other sufficient reason” in s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the review should be granted and the appeal re-heard. Upon the hearing of an application for review of judgment, upon which an order has been passed directing the opposite party to show cause why the application should not be granted, counsel for the opposite party should begin. GHANSHAM SING v. LAL SING I. L. R., 9 All., 61

103. ———— Question of general commercial importance—Special ground.—Where the point sought to be raised in review had not been raised or argued by either party, but was first taken by the Court itself in giving its opinion upon the case referred to it, the Court granted a review, observing as follows: “The question arising in this case is not a question merely between two parties, but is one of great general commercial importance, and under the circumstances, and on the very special grounds I have mentioned, we think that the review ought to be granted.” SULLEMAN HUSSEIN v. NEW ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION . I. L. R., 15 Bom., 267

104. ———— Application for review of an order contrary to law—Attachment of person in execution of decree—Liability of married woman—Waiver.—R, as surety for her husband, joined with him in executing a bond for Rs. 100. In a suit brought upon the bond, a decree was passed against both. R was arrested in execution of the decree, and brought before the Court. She was then asked if she desired to apply to be declared an insolvent under the insolvency sections of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), but not doing so she was committed to jail. Subsequently, however, she applied to be declared an insolvent, but her application was rejected. She then claimed to be released on the ground of her coverture. The Judge rejected her application as being too late. On reference to the High Court,—Held that her application for release was virtually an application for review of the order for her imprisonment, on the ground that it was contrary to law; that her mere omission to take the objection at the time of her arrest could not be regarded as a waiver of her right of exemption from arrest; and having regard to the nature of the right claimed, it was one which the Court could not properly decline to consider on review, however late the application might have been. IN RE THE PETITION OF RADHI I. 5. GROUNDS FOR REVIEW—continued.

105. ———— Erroneous application of s. 575, Civil Procedure Code—Civil Procedure Code, s. 623.—One of the cases to which s. 575 of the Code does not apply is where, a preliminary objection being taken to the hearing of a first appeal before the High Court on the ground that the appeal is time-barred, the Judges of the Division Bench differ in opinion as to whether the appellant has shown sufficient cause, within the meaning of s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed period. The decision of such a preliminary objection is not a "hearing" of the appeal, but precedes the hearing or determines that there is no appeal which the Court can hear or decide. Where such a preliminary objection is allowed, it cannot be said that the Court which, by reason of the Limitation Act, has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, should nevertheless "affirm" the decree of the Court below. In the case of such a preliminary objection and such a difference of opinion (the Bench being equally divided), the opinion of the senior Judge should, under s. 27 of the Letters Patent, prevail. Appaji Bhivrao v. Shevlall Khubchand, I. L. R., 3 Bom., 204, and Gridharji Maharaj Tikait v. Parushotom Gossami, I. L. R., 10 Cal., 814, distinguished. Where, in such a case, the provisions of the second paragraph of s. 575 of the Code were erroneously applied, and the judgment of the junior Judge, holding that the appeal should be dismissed as time-barred, prevailed, and the Court, on appeal under s. 10 of the Letters Patent, affirmed such judgment,—Held that, under the circumstances, there was a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, and that there was sufficient cause for granting a review of the Court's decree under s. 623 of the Code. HUSAINI BEGAM v. COLLECTOR OF MUZAFFARNAGAR . . . I. L. R., 11 All., 176

106. ———— Production of new document.—The objection to the admission of a review of judgment on the strength of a new document was not allowed to prevail in a case where the so-called new document was not the sole reason for the admission of the review. HUBO GOBIND PAL v. HUBO SOONDAREN CHOWDHRAIN . . . 18 W. R., 316

107. ———— Reversal of decree on which decision was based.—Where claims for rent were decreed by a Deputy Collector on the basis of a decree for a kabuliati, which latter decree was subsequently set aside, the proper remedy was an application to the Deputy Collector for a review of his decision. MOORAREN MOORAJIM v. MAHOMED AKMAL . . . 22 W. R., 161

108. ———— Discovery of new evidence—Grounds for admission of review in special appeal.—The High Court has no authority to admit a review of a judgment passed in special appeal merely on the ground that new evidence to prove a fact has been discovered. *BHYRUB NATH TYE v. 113. Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 376.—During the pendency of a suit for rent a plaintiff applied for postponement on the ground that he was unable to obtain a copy of a document which he had applied for from the Collectorate. The Munsif refused postponement and gave him a modified decree. The plaintiff subsequently obtained a review of judgment and a decree in full. The Judge on appeal decided that the Munsif was wrong in admitting the review, because the plaintiff had not mentioned that he was previously unacquainted with the existence of the document. Held that the review was properly admitted under Act VIII of 1859, s. 376. GOOR DIAL ROY v. 114. Nature of evidence—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 376.—The new evidence referred to in s. 376, Act VIII of 1859, is evidence that would probably alter the decision of the Court. The affidavit on which an application for review is grounded must state what the new evidence to be relied on is: in such an affidavit no reliance can be placed on a statement of belief of good defence on the merits, but the facts to be relied on as such must be set out. DEHUNSOOK DASS v. it was held by the lower Appellate Court and by the High Court on second appeal that the properties comprised therein were under attachment at the time of its execution, and that it was accordingly void under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 276, as against the claims of judgment-creditors enforceable under the attachment. The plaintiff, who was the appellant on second appeal, sought a review of the judgment pronounced therein on the ground of the discovery of new and important documentary evidence from which it would appear that the properties in question were not under attachment at the date of the mortgage. Held that the application for review could not be entertained for the reason that the ground relied upon could not be successfully relied upon on a second appeal. RARU KUTTI v. 128. ——— Ground for review—Suit by mortgagee to declare lien—Subsequent suit for possession.—The plaintiff, a mortgagee, obtained a money-decree against the defendant. A third party, in execution of another decree obtained against the same defendant, put up for sale the property included in the plaintiff's mortgage, and himself brought the right, title, and interest of his judgment-debtor in the property mortgaged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff subsequently, in execution of his decree, bought in the same property himself, and brought a suit against the defendant and the third party to have it declared that the latter held the property subject to his mortgage. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but eventually dismissed by the High Court, on the ground that the plaintiff, by suing for his money-decree only, had deprived himself of the benefit of his lien as against the third party. The plaintiff thereupon brought another suit against the same parties to recover possession of the mortgaged property, which suit eventually came up before a Full Bench, where it was decided that the plaintiff had no right to bring the suit for recovery of possession, but that his proper course was to sue to have his lien upon the property declared, the Court intimating that it would be open to the plaintiff to apply for a review of judgment in the suit originally brought by him. On the review coming on to be heard, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a review of that judgment, and that the case was distinguishable from the general rule as to reviews laid down in *Madhub Chunder Ghose v. 136. ———— Mistake of counsel—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 623—"Sufficient cause."—In a suit between A and B heard to the 28th January 1883, a certain conveyance was filed with the plaint, but up to the hearing this conveyance had been protected from discovery. B's counsel had, however, had a copy thereof delivered to him at the time B's written statement was being drawn, and a copy briefed to him at the hearing. At the hearing, A's counsel stated that the effect of the conveyance was to vest the entirety of a certain property in A; this view was accepted by B's counsel, who did not read the conveyance. The only issue in the case was "who was in possession of the property," and the Court decided this issue on the 5th February in favour of the plaintiff. On the 26th February B brought a suit against A to set aside this conveyance on the ground of fraud. And in certain proceedings in this case taken on the 31st March, B's counsel discovered, as he alleged for the first time, that under the conveyance a moiety of a seven-twenty-fourth share remained in B. On that day instructions were given to B's counsel to draw up a petition of review of the judgment of the 5th February. This petition, owing to the Easter vacation, was not, and could not have been, presented till the 9th April. Held that the words "sufficient reason" in s. 623 of the Code should receive a liberal construction, and should be construed so as to do substantial justice to the parties; that as in this case it appeared to the Court that the construction placed upon the conveyance by B's counsel was the correct one, "sufficient reason" had been shown for making the application. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SOLOMON. GOPAUL CHUNDER LAHIRI v. SOLOMON [I. L. R., 11 Cal., 767]

Held, on the appeal, per GARTH, C.J.—Although it is difficult, and perhaps undesirable, to attempt to define precisely the meaning of the words "any other sufficient reason" in s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, yet from the earlier part of the clause it is clear that a point which might have been, but which was not, discovered at the trial by the exercise of due diligence, was not intended by the section to afford any sufficient reason for review. Per WILSON, J.—Seem—If at a trial all parties, counsel on both sides, and the Judge are under a misapprehension as to the contents of a document, or even if the Judge alone is misled on such a point, and in consequence a wrong decree is made, the mistake ought to be corrected on review. GOPAL CHANDRA LAHIRI v. 137. ——— Discovery of new evidence—Lapse of time.—The discovery of new evidence may make it proper to grant a review, but the circumstances must be very special,—the more so when the application for review is made many years after the date of the decree, and the evidence discovered must be of a clear and conclusive character. HEERA LALL GHOSH v. 139. ——— Adoption of daughter's son—Custom—Breaches of custom—Practice—New case set up in special appeal.—An application for review was presented to the High Court more than eighteen months after time, the applicant alleging that, soon after the decision sought to be reviewed, he was engaged in collecting instances of the special custom relied upon by him in support of his claim. The special custom was not set up in the Courts below, but an objection was taken for the first time in special appeal that an issue regarding it should have been raised in the lower Courts. No instance of such special custom had been given in evidence. It was urged that the applicant was a minor until shortly before the making of the High Court decree, and was only represented by his adoptive mother as his guardian. The High Court considered that there was no sufficient excuse for the delay, and rejected the application, observing that, unless upon very strong grounds and under very special circumstances, the Court would hesitate to permit a party at such a stage of his suit to set up a case which was not set up for him in the Courts below, where his professional representative must have been well aware whether such a case could be legitimately set up, and abstained from any attempt to do so. GOPAL SAFFRAY v. 140. ——— Just and reasonable cause—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 377.—The plaintiff in a suit applied, more than two years after the proper time, for a review of judgment in such suit, filing with his application a copy of a decision by the High Court, which had been passed subsequently to the date of such judgment, in support of a contention contained in his application which should have been, but was not, urged at the hearing of his suit. Such contention and the other arguments and statements contained in his application might have been adduced within the time allowed by law for an application for a review of judgment. Held that, as such contention might have been urged at the first hearing of the case, there was no "just and reasonable cause" for preferring the application after time, and the Court of first instance was therefore not warranted in granting the application and reviewing its judgment. MADHO DAS v. BUKMAN SEWAK SINGH. I. L. R., 2 All., 287

141. ——— Necessity for review not arising—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 376.—Though a certain issue in a suit was decided against the plaintiff, the suit was decreed, and the defendants obtained a review on which that decree was set aside and the plaintiff's suit declared barred by limitation. On this the plaintiff applied for a review of both judgments. Held that, though his application in relation to the former judgment was not in time, yet as he had no occasion to ask for a review until the latter judgment was passed, the words of s. 376, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, entitled him to ask the Court to reconsider both judgments. BAGOO JAN v. 143. ——— Issue not raised in lower Courts—Application for review after special appeal.—In an application for review after special appeal, the Court will not entertain a question not raised before at a former stage of the suit. IN RE TUFANI SINGH . . . 6 B. L. R., Ap., 141

144. ——— New arguments—Matter previously adjudicated on.—The Judges are not required to re-adjudicate points considered and adjudicated when brought before them by a pleader then employed, though they may be better argued, and put in a different light by another pleader subsequently, but are to be guided in their admission of reviews by the definite terms of ss. 377 and 378 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859. CHOONEE MUNDUR v. CRUNDER LALL DASS . . . 14 W. R., 334

145. ——— Issue not noticed in the lower Court—Arguments on appeal and review.—In the first Court an issue was raised whether or no the hearing of this suit was barred by the law of limitation. One of the grounds of appeal to the Judge was, that the Principal Sudder Ameen ought to have held the suit barred as regards the diaras under the special limitation of three years from the date of the Collector's settlement. The Judge did not notice this ground in his judgment. The same ground of appeal was repeated on the special appeal to the High Court, but that Court refused to entertain it, for the reason that it did not appear to have been raised in argument before the Judge or in the first Court. On application for review, it was urged that the Court ought to have listened to this ground, but the Court adhered to its former decision. Counsel should not be heard to re-argue a case on review upon the same points as were argued on special appeal. RAJ KUNWAR v. INDIRJIT KUNWAR [5 B. L. R., 585; 13 W. R., 52]

146. ——— Points for argument—Questions already discussed and decided—New points.—On application for review of judgment,—Held a party applying for the review of judgment must show that there is good and sufficient cause for granting the review before he can be heard to argue that the decision is erroneous. In so showing cause, (first) no point can be raised which has been already discussed and decided on the original hearing of the appeal; and (secondly) no new point which has not been raised at the hearing of the appeal can be argued on the application for review. *BHAWABAL SINGH v. 147. ——— Points for argument—Act VIII of 1859, s. 376—Arguments and grounds to be raised on review.—It cannot be treated as a universal rule that no point can be raised on an application for a review which has been already discussed and decided on the original hearing of the appeal; or that no new point which has not been raised on the hearing of the appeal can be argued on the application for a review. In each case the Court to which the application is made must consider and decide whether a review is necessary to correct any evident error or omission, or is otherwise requisite for the ends of justice. *IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHINTAMANI PAL. B., 1]

148. ——— Points already decided—New points—Discretion of Court.—Parties applying for a review of judgment are not absolutely debarred from asking for a re-hearing of a matter which has been already argued and considered, nor are they debarred from raising a point which has not, but which might have been, raised previously; but in every such case it lies upon the party making the application to show the Court some good ground upon which that indulgence is asked for, and it is in the discretion of the Court to allow or to refuse such an application. HUREE PERSHAD MUNDUL v. NUND KISHORE SINGH . . . 17 W. R., 479

154. ——— Appeal by some only of several defendants.—Application for review by some only of defendants in separate interests.—Effect of decree on review modifying decision on appeal.—In a suit, in which several defendants were joined, to set aside alienations made at different times and to different persons, plaintiff succeeded in the first Court partly, and on appeal wholly, and obtained a decree ordering the alienated property to be restored to him. Then the defendants, their interests being separate, brought separate special appeals, which were dismissed. After this, two of them applied for a review, and the decrees were modified (a portion of the claim being declared barred by limitation), but on a ground not applicable to all the defendants. Held that, if these decrees were separate decrees in each appeal, the High Court had no power to modify the decrees in which there was no application for review, and which therefore remained in force, and should be executed. PEGOO JAN v. 160. — Objection taken on appeal—Objection as to improper grant of review—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 376.—Although the order itself for granting a review of judgment is final, yet, on appeal against the decision passed in review, objection may be taken that the review was improperly granted. ABDUL RAHIM v. RAOHA RAI [I. L. R., 1 All., 363]

161. — Objection that evidence was within knowledge of applicant.—Where, owing to the conduct of the opposite party, who, though served with notice, made no objection, an applicant for review had no opportunity of showing that a new piece of evidence which he adduced was not within his knowledge and could not be adduced by him when the decree was passed, such opposite party cannot afterwards be allowed to object on the ground of the Full Bench ruling in Bhyrub Chunder Surmah Chowdhry v. Madhubram Surmah, 11 B. L. R., 423: 20 W. R., 84. RAM JOY GOOPTO v. JUGODES-SUREN 22 W. R., 399

162. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 378—Appeal against review not justified by evidence.—The Full Bench ruling, Bhyrub Chunder Surmah Chowdhry v. Madhubram Surmah, 11 B. L. R., 423: 20 W. R., 84, that a special appeal would lie to determine whether in an order granting a review there had been any irregularity, and that the word "final" in the Civil Procedure Code, s. 378, would not prevent the Appellate Court from considering afterwards the legality of the order, was held to apply to cases in which a regular appeal is preferred on the ground that the admission of the review was not justified by the evidence. JOY KISHEN MOOKERJEE v. PARBUTTY CHURN GHOSAL [22 W. R., 183]

163. — Fresh evidence—Error in granting review.—The Munsif dismissed a suit. Afterwards he issued a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why a review of judgment should not be granted. The defendant showed cause, but his objections were overruled; the review was granted, both plaintiff and defendant adduced new evidence, and a decree was given for the plaintiff. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed this decision on the ground relied upon by the defendant in showing cause in the lower Court, namely, that the defendant had not established that with due diligence he could not have brought forward in the original trial the evidence upon which his application for review was based. Held on special appeal that the fact of the defendant having adduced fresh evidence in the Court below did not debar him from objecting before the Subordinate Judge that the review was wrongly granted, because the order admitting it was final. PRANNATH BHADOORY v. WUZERE NARAIN . 24 W. R., 427

168. — Power to enter another objection without remand.—In a suit to recover possession of certain land, which, though described in the plaint as partly bastoo and partly agricultural land, was treated by both parties as agricultural only, it was found by the Court of first instance that the defendants had acquired a right of occupancy. This finding having been confirmed by the lower Appellate Court, an application was made for a review, and on review that Court reversed its former decree on the ground that no right of occupancy could be acquired. Held that on review the lower Appellate Court ought not to have entertained the objection that the land was not agricultural without remanding the case for the trial of a fresh issue on that point. KHOORSH MAHOMED v. The lower Appellate Court at first doubted the genuineness of the pottah and reversed that decision, but, on an application for review, admitted additional evidence on both sides and dismissed the appeal. Held that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have allowed points to be explained away in the review stage by admitting additional evidence thereon, though in this particular case injustice was not done. TEKART KHOOD NARAIN SINGH v. On a subsequent application by the accused, the Judge admitted the appeal and at the hearing acquitted him. The High Court sent for the record in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. Held that the order of acquittal was ultra vires under s. 430 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order dismissing the appeal was final and not open to review. It was argued that s. 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code only applies to orders passed on the merits, and that, as the order rejecting the appeal was not of that class, it was not an order "upon appeal" and was not final under s. 430. Held that s. 421 was not limited to orders passed on the merits, and that the order in question was an order upon appeal and final under s. 430. The Criminal Procedure Code makes no provision for review of judgments in criminal matters by subordinate Appellate Courts. The jurisdiction of revision is vested in the High Court, which has ample powers under Ch. XXXII to rectify any inadvertent failure of justice. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHIMAPPA DIN RAMANNA

186. ——— Power of review in criminal cases.—Where a District Magistrate on 12th June 1897 made an order after hearing an inquiry as to the possession of some missing property supposed to have been stolen, and afterwards on 3rd August 1897 reversed the order as erroneous,—Held, per BANADE, J., the District Magistrate had no power to review his own previous order of the 12th June 1897, passed on full inquiry and after hearing both parties. The power of revision in criminal cases is very strictly confined, and the same considerations which prevent subordinate Courts from altering their judgments on review hold good in respect of final orders which are of the nature of a judgment. In re HARILAL BUOH I. 2. ——— Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Circumstances under which the High Court will exercise its revisional powers.—S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) was not intended to give in effect a right of appeal in all Small Cause Court cases, either on law or fact. The revisional powers given by that section are only exercisable where it appears that some substantial injustice to a party to the litigation has directly resulted from a material misapplication or misapprehension of law, or from a material error in procedure. *Muhammad Nizam-ud-din Khan v. decision on a question of limitation. Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, I. L. R., 11 Calc., 6, referred to. RAGHU NATH SAHAI r. OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF THE HIMALAYA BANK [I. L. R., 15 All., 139]

4. ——— Discretion of Court—Superintendence of High Court under Civil Procedure Code, s. 622.—S. 25 of Act IX of 1887 was not intended to give what would practically be an appeal in every case from the decision of a Court of Small Causes, but the discretion to be exercised thereunder should be guided by the same considerations as those which govern the application of s. 622 of Act XIV of 1882. Muhammad Bakar v. Bahal Singh, I. L. R., 13 All., 277, and Raghunath Bahai v. Official Liquidator of the Himalaya Bank, I. L. R., 15 All., 139, referred to. SARMAN LAL r. KHUBAN . I. L. R., 16 All., 476

5. ——— Civil Procedure Code, s. 622—Superintendence of High Court—Ground for revision—Question of limitation.—It is no ground for revision under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887 that the Court whose order it is sought to revise may have come to an erroneous decision on a point of limitation. Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, I. L. R., 11 Calc., 6, referred to. SARMAN LAL r. KHUBAN . I. L. R., 17 All., 422

6. ——— Jurisdiction and superintendence of the High Court—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 622—Practice.—An error of law or procedure in the Small Cause Court confers jurisdiction upon the High Court to exercise the power committed by s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). The powers conferred by the section are, however, purely discretionary, and the section does not give a right of appeal in all Small Cause Court cases either on law or on fact. The High Court is to determine in what cases it shall exercise the powers conferred upon it. It is not the practice of the Bombay High Court to interfere under s. 25 of the Act when there are no substantial merits in the case of the applicant. It interferes to remedy injustice. It is slow to interfere where substantial justice has been done by the subordinate Court, although that Court may technically have erred. The provisions of s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) do not afford a safe guide for the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The wording of the two sections is wholly different, that of s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act being of the widest description and conferring the most ample discretion on the High Court, while it has been held by the Privy Council that s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code ought to be construed in a very restricted and limited sense. *POONA CITY MUNICIPALITY r. properly be taken as indicating the lines along which a Judge would do well to exercise his discretion in admitting an application under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act, a Judge is not absolutely bound to refuse any application under s. 25 of the latter Act which could not be admitted under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. *Sarman Lal v. 8. ———— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1889), s. 203—Decree not according to law—Substantial failure of justice—Interference under extraordinary jurisdiction.—The plaintiff, a Hindu widow, sued for B74-4-0, being the balance due on an account. She called six witnesses to prove her claim. The defendant did not appear to defend the suit. The Judge, however, dismissed the suit, the only judgment recorded by him being as follows: "Claim not proved. Claim rejected with costs." The plaintiff thereupon applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and the above decree was set aside, and a decree passed for the plaintiff with costs. Held that the decree, being founded on a judgment not in accordance with s. 203 of the Civil Procedure Code, was not according to law, and therefore the High Court, under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, had jurisdiction to pass such order in the matter as it thought fit. Per FARRAN, C.J.—In a case where there is nothing to excite suspicion, and where the plaintiff had given such proof of her claim as the law requires, the plaintiff is entitled, and this Court is entitled, to have some indication from the Judge of the point upon which he dismisses the suit, to show that he is not acting from mere caprice or in ignorance of the rules of law which regulate the proof requisite to establish a plaintiff's claim. Per FULTON, J.—The ground on which I would base our decision is that the error under s. 203 brings the case within our jurisdiction, and that the case being thus before us we are entitled, on being convinced that a failure of justice has occurred, to pass an order which will rectify the mistake. BAI JASODA v. BAMANSHA MANCHERJI

9. ———— Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (1888), ss. 135 and 167—"Valuation," Meaning of—Re-valuation made by the Municipality within six years from the date of the valuation made after hearing objection, Legality of—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1889), s. 622—Stat. 24 & 25 Vict., c. 104, s. 15—Superintendence of High Court.—The word "valuation" in s. 135 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888) means, not "the amount of the valuation" only, but also the process or act of valuation. A valuation was made by the Calcutta Municipality of a holding, the rate-payer objected to the amount, and the Vice-Chairman of the Municipality, on hearing the objection, fixed the valuation at a certain amount.

REVISION—CIVIL CASES—concluded.2. SMALL CAUSE COURT CASES—concluded.

Within six years from this valuation fixed after objection, a re-valuation was made by the Municipality, and the rate-payer objected to the legality of such valuation on the ground that the Municipality had no power to make a re-valuation within six years from the date of the last valuation. The Vice-Chairman overruled the objection, and the rate-payer appealed under s. 157 of the Act to the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah, who allowed the appeal. Held that, inasmuch as the objection raised by the rate-payer was an objection to the valuation within the meaning of s. 135 of the Act, the Judge of the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to deal with it. That being so, it was not open to the High Court to interfere either under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, or under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or under s. 15 of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 104. *CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. 25. ——— Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 439.—The interference of the High Court in revision is not limited to matters of law; it is fully competent to the High Court to enter into matters of fact if it thinks fit. But the mere application of a party to examine the evidence in any case would not be a sufficient ground for doing so. There must appear, on the face of the judgment or order complained of, or of the record, some ground to induce the High Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see that there has been no failure of justice. 36. ———— Omission to give available evidence for prosecution—Material “error” —Error in appreciation of evidence—Act X of 1872, s. 297.—It was not a ground for revision by the High Court that all the evidence for the prosecution which might have been brought before the Sessions Judge had not been brought before him. The words “material error” in that section could not be held to include error in the appreciation of evidence. Under the 1st clause of s. 297, Act X of 1872, the High Court could not set aside findings of fact except in case of an appeal from a conviction. IN THE MATTER OF AUROKIAM I. L. R., 2 Mad., 38

39. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 426—Admission of illegal evidence—Act II of 1855, s. 57—New trial.—The Appellate Court, where it finds that illegal evidence has been admitted, should consider whether it is such as is likely to have exercised prejudicial influence on the minds of the jury; and if the Court be of opinion that it is so, it will treat the case as if it had been tried by a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors. If the evidence (after omitting that portion of it which should not have been admitted) is sufficient to sustain the verdict, the conviction will be upheld. In exceptional cases, where the evidence is of such a character as to suggest the consideration that its real value cannot fairly be appreciated except by a Court which has heard that evidence given, a new trial will be directed. 44. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 426, 439—Irregularity not prejudicing prisoner—Madras Police Act, 1859, s. 44.—A police constable was tried and convicted by the Assistant Agent of Vizagapatam under s. 44 of Act XXIV of 1859, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment. On appeal, the Agent reversed the conviction and sentence, on the ground that there had been irregularity of procedure on the part of his assistant in not recording evidence for the prosecution, and in only taking down the substance of the prisoner's statement, and not the full statement as made. Held that the question was whether there had been such error and irregularity on the part of the Assistant Agent as to prejudice the accused and to occasion a failure of justice; that if not, the order reversing the conviction was rendered bad in law by ss. 426 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code; that the accused did not appear to have been prejudiced: consequently the order of the Appellate Court was set aside, and a re-hearing directed. 49. ———— Power of High Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861), s. 366—Examination of accused—Postponement of trial for summoning a witness—Discretion of Judge.—A Deputy Magistrate committed certain prisoners for trial on a charge of dacoity. Some of the prisoners had confessed before the Deputy Magistrate, but he failed to record the examination of the prisoners, or to attest it as required by s. 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sessions Judge therefore refused to admit the examination of the prisoners by the Deputy Magistrate in evidence, and also refused to postpone the trial for the purpose of summoning the Deputy Magistrate and taking his evidence in the matter. Held that, it being wholly within the discretion of the Judge, under s. 366, to say whether or not he should postpone the trial, or summon any witness to give his evidence, the High Court as a Court of revision would not interfere or order a new trial. QUEEN v. He was convicted and sentenced, under s. 326 of the Penal Code, to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The Local Government, being of opinion that the sentence was inadequate, moved the High Court, under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), to quash the Magistrate's proceedings, and ordered the accused to be committed for trial to the High Court. It was contended for the prisoner that, as the offence was not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the High Court had no power, under s. 423 (b) of the Code, to order the accused to be committed for trial. Held, dissenting from Queen-Empress v. Sukhi, I. L. R., 8 All., 14, that s. 423 (b) gives to an Appellate Court the power to order an accused person to be committed for trial when it considers that that is the procedure that should have been adopted by the Magistrate in the case. Held also that the offence of which the prisoner was convicted, being one punishable under s. 326 of the Penal Code with transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for ten years and fine, the Presidency Magistrate ought to have committed the accused for trial to the High Court. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 74. ——— Omission to record reasons for conviction.—Omission to take notes of evidence is non-appealable case—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 370, 537.—In a case where the accused was convicted of theft and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, the notes of the evidence taken by the Magistrate did not afford sufficient materials upon which the prisoner could be legally convicted, and the Magistrate had omitted to record his reasons for the conviction under s. 370, cl. 78. ——— Setting aside conviction and sentence, and directing trial on graver offence.—Power of High Court—Conviction of lesser offence by Court having no jurisdiction to convict of a graver one.—When the evidence upon which a prisoner is convicted by a subordinate tribunal of an offence within its jurisdiction discloses an offence of a graver character beyond the jurisdiction of that tribunal, the High Court may quash the conviction and sentence for the minor offence, and direct a trial before the tribunal having jurisdiction for the graver offence. Whether it will do so or not, is a question not of law, but of expediency on the facts of each particular case. ANONYMOUS

79. ——— Ground for enhancing sentence.—Sentence clearly inadequate—Charge improperly framed.—In a case in which the Magistrate referred the proceedings to the High Court with a recommendation that they should be set aside because the sentence was inadequate, it was held that it is not merely because circumstances occur to the Magistrate which would render necessary a more severe sentence or a different charge that the High Court should interfere. There must be matter on the record of the case showing that a charge has been improperly framed, or that the sentence passed is clearly inadequate to the offence. QUEEN v. HARNATH SINGH

80. ——— Ground for refusing to enhance sentence.—Reference by Commissioner having jurisdiction—Inadequate sentence.—The High Court refused to interfere on a reference made to it by a Deputy Commissioner in a case which was sent up for heavier punishment to the Deputy Commissioner under s. 46, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, by a Magistrate of the 2nd class, as the Court was of opinion that the Deputy Commissioner, instead of referring the case, ought under that section to have tried the prisoners himself, and convicted them of any offence which he thought was made out against them by the evidence. SOBIL DASS v. As the accused had not been sentenced to a larger amount of punishment than could have been awarded for criminal breach of trust, nor shown to have been prejudiced by the error of convicting him under the Post Office Act, the High Court refused to reverse or alter the sentence, pointing out at the same time that this was one of those cases in which it was a mistake to look at the smallness of the amount misappropriated rather than to the gravity of the offence. IN THE MATTER OF NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT

11. VERDICT OF JURY AND MISDIRECTION.

94. ————— Ground for interference with verdict—Power of High Court—Verdict of jury not manifestly erroneous.—The Court will not interfere with the finding of a jury unless their verdict is shown to be manifestly erroneous. A prisoner was charged under ss. 302 and 304 of the Penal Code, and the Judge at the trial added a further charge under s. 325. The Judge in his charge to the jury directed them that in the event of their finding the charges under ss. 302 and 304 unsustainable, they might find the prisoner guilty under s. 325. The jury unanimously acquitted the prisoner under the charge framed under s. 302, and a majority of them acquitted him under the charge framed under s. 304; but a majority of them found him guilty under the charge framed under s. 325. The Judge disagreed with their finding as regarded the charge framed under s. 304, and referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The High Court refused to interfere with the verdict, on ground that the verdict could not be said to be manifestly erroneous, the Judge having heard the evidence and having expressed his opinion to the jury that they might find the prisoner guilty under s. 325. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 11. VERDICT OF JURY AND MISDIRECTION—continued.

95. ————— Conviction on evidence not amounting to proof.—A jury may be satisfied with a minimum of proof, and it is beyond the power of the High Court in such cases to interfere with its verdict; but when there is nothing which can, if believed, amount to proof, the case should not be put to the jury at all, as a verdict of guilty cannot under such circumstances be sustained. Under such circumstances, the Court will set a conviction aside. QUEEN v. RUTTON DASS

SOREHAIS* 13 W. R., Cr., 33

97. ————— Omission to charge jury properly—Power of High Court to set aside verdict.—Omission to sum up properly to the jury is, if the prisoner is thereby prejudiced, an error in law such as to justify a Court of appeal in setting aside the verdict. REG. v. FATTEHABD VASTACHAND 5 Bom., Cr., 85

98. ————— Misdirection—Trial by jury—Power to go into facts of case—Mode of dealing with directions of Judge to jury.—In a case tried by jury the High Court has no power to go into the facts of the case in order to see whether or not the conviction was right, that standing entirely upon the verdict of the jury. The Court has only to consider the facts in order to see whether the Judge has done his duty in laying the case before the jury for their consideration. The mode of dealing by the High Court with the Judge's summing up to the jury pointed out, first as regards the law and then as regards the facts. QUEEN v. NIMCHAND MOUKERJEE 20 W. R., Cr., 41

99. ————— Error in law—Prejudice to accused—New trial. Improper advice given by the Judge to the jury upon a question of fact, or the omission of the Judge to give that advice which a Judge in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion ought to give the jury upon questions of fact, amounts to such an error in law in summing up as to justify the High Court on appeal or revision in setting aside a verdict of guilty. The power of setting aside convictions and ordering new trials for any error or defect in the summing up will be exercised by the High Court only when the Court is satisfied that the accused person has been prejudiced by the error or defect, or that a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby. *QUEEN v. cause.—Certain persons were convicted by a Magistrate of the 1st class of assault, an offence punishable under s. 352 of Act X of 1877. The case was brought to the knowledge of the High Court by the complainant pererring a petition to it, together with a copy of the Magistrate's order. This petition was laid before STRAIGHT, J., who, observing that the case was one in which the Magistrate should have taken security from such persons for keeping the peace, as provided by s. 489 of Act X of 1872, directed the Magistrate to summon such persons to show cause why they should not be required, under s. 491 of that Act, to enter into a bond to keep the peace. The Magistrate accordingly summoned such persons as directed, the summonses setting forth that they were issued "under the orders of the High Court." The Magistrate took evidence on behalf of such persons and eventually made an order requiring such persons to enter into a bond to keep the peace. Such persons were fully aware of the order made by STRAIGHT, J. Such persons applied to the High Court to set aside the order requiring them to enter into a bond to keep the peace, on the ground that the Magistrate had not proceeded of his own motion, but under the order of STRAIGHT, J., which was made without jurisdiction; and on the ground that the summonses had not set forth the report or information on which they were issued. Held by STUART, C.J., that, inasmuch as STRAIGHT, J., when he made his order, represented the full authority and jurisdiction of the High Court, such order was final and the application could not be entertained. Held by PEARSON, J., SPANKIE, J., and OLDFIELD, J. (SPANKIE, J., doubting whether such order could be questioned), that the order of STRAIGHT, J., was one which he was competent to make as a Court of revision under s. 297 of Act X of 1872. Held by PEARSON, J., and SPANKIE, J., that, inasmuch as such persons had not been in the slightest degree prejudiced by the defect in the summonses which were issued to them, such defect was not a ground on which to set aside the Magistrate's order requiring them to enter into a bond to keep the peace. *EMPRESS v. The dismissed trustees retained possession. A breach of the peace having become imminent in the opinion of a Deputy Magistrate, he made an order under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 144, directing the newly-appointed trustees not to interfere with the temple or its management. Held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order, and therefore the High Court had no power to interfere in revision under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 435. PALANIAPPA CHETTI v. s. 28 of the Letters Patent, 1865, but of s. 15 of the Charter Act (24 & 25 Vict., c. 104). That section has always been interpreted in a very extended meaning so as to give ample powers of superintendence, that is to say, powers of revision over proceedings of subordinate Courts. The suit was decided again in favour of the plaintiff, but the decision was reversed on appeal. Held that the fact of the defendant having, in the first instance, allowed the intervenor alone to appeal, did not debar him, after the case was re-opened by remand, from appealing in his own person. *BUCHA SINGH v. A second appeal therefore to the High Court, on a question of the amount due as rent, will not lie when the suit was instituted previous to the passing of Act VIII of 1885, although the judgment in the suit was delivered, and the first appeal therefrom heard, subsequently to the passing of that Act. Hurrosundari Debi v. RIGHT OF APPEAL—continued.

582.—Any plaintiff or defendant has a right to appeal without the concurrence of any of the parties to the suit. The mere fact of the death of one of several appellants cannot affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal if they choose to do so. One of several appellants (defendants) died after appeal filed, but before the hearing. An application to have the name of his heir entered on the record as an appellant was rejected as too late. One of the respondents (plaintiffs) also died pending the hearing of the appeal, and an application to enter the name of his heir as respondent was rejected for the same reason. When the appeal came on for hearing, it was dismissed as defective for want of parties. Held that the proper course for the Appeal Court was to order that the appeal had abated so far as the deceased appellant (defendant) was concerned and to proceed with the hearing so far as the remaining appellants were concerned. Held also, with reference to the death of the respondent (plaintiff), that the Appeal Court ought to have proceeded under the provisions of s. 368 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and to have either declared that the appeal had abated as to him and proceeded against the rest of the respondents under s. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code, or else to have directed that the legal representatives of the deceased respondent should be placed upon the record. CHANDARSANG VERSABHAI v. The Court, applying ss. 367 and 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, decided in favour of one of the applicants and brought him upon the record. No appeal was made against this order by the unsuccessful applicant. The lower Appellate Court decided the appeal adversely to the successful applicant. Subsequently the unsuccessful applicant established by a separate suit that she was the deceased's legal representative, and that her opponent was not. She attempted to appeal to the High Court against the lower Appellate Court's decree dismissing the appeal. Held that the appellant, not having been a party to the decree below, and the order below having decided that she was not entitled to be a party to the proceedings of the lower Appellate Court, she was not entitled to maintain the appeal to the High Court, and s. 591 of the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable to the case. Har Narain v. Error, defect, or irregularity within the meaning of s. 591 of the Code means error, defect, or irregularity in procedure or in law, and not in matters of fact. 22. ———— Plaint, Amendment of— Adding a defendant in a suit where leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, was necessary—Alternative liability—Order to add new defendant—Appeal against such order by original defendant.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant F alleging that she had a firm and carried on business at Sihore, in the territory of Bhopal. Before the suit was filed, leave was duly obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865. In her written statement, F denied that she was the owner of the Sihore firm, or that she was responsible for any of its dealings with the plaintiffs. She alleged that the Sihore firm had belonged to her son P, who died in Samvat 1943, leaving a daughter named G, a minor, who was still living. The plaintiff then obtained a summons calling on the defendant F to show cause why the plaint and proceedings should not be amended by adding the name of G as a party-defendant. The summons was made absolute, and an order was made to add G as a defendant. The defendant F appealed, contending that the effect of adding a defendant would be to institute a new suit against G without obtaining the necessary leave under the Letters Patent. She relied on Rampurab v. Prem-sukh Chandamal, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 93. Held, dismissing the appeal, that the defendant F could not appeal against the order making G a party. It might be that G might object to the order either before or at the hearing, but she only could take the objection. The defendant F could not take it for her. The case of Rampurab v. Prem-sukh Chandamal did not apply. In that case the proposed amendment altered the cause of action. Here it was left unaffected. On the cause of action as set forth in the plaint leave had been given under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent to sue the defendant F, and, so far as she was concerned, there was no objection to the form of the suit. If her allegation was true, G, and not F, was liable. That question would be decided at the trial. POOLIBAI v. RAMPRATAB SAMRATRAI against whom specifically no decree was made, but whose defence to the suit was necessarily disposed of by the decree.—Certain plaintiffs sued as second assignees of a debt to recover the debt, and made defendants to the suit their assignors, the original debtors, and certain persons whom they alleged to have been prior assignees of the debt, but whose assignment, according to them, had become void through non-fulfilment of the conditions upon which it was made. the original debtors. An appeal by the first assignees was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that, there being no decree against the appellants, their appeal would not lie. On second appeal it was held that the appeal would lie, inasmuch as the decree, though not a decree against the appellants by name, necessarily implied a finding that the assignment to the appellants, upon the basis of which they resisted the plaintiffs' claim, had become void. *JAMNA DAS v. 4. ——— Permanent cultivator—Paracudi.—The defendant's ancestors or predecessors in title were the cultivating tenants of the lands of a certain temple from a date not later than 1827, in which year they were so described in the paimaish accounts. In 1830 they executed a muchalka to the Collector, who then managed the temple whereby they agreed among other things to pay certain dues. They were described in the muchalka as paracudis. In 1857 the plaintiff's predecessors took over the management of the temple from, and executed a muchalka to, the Collector, whereby he agreed among other things not to eject the raiyats as long as they paid kist. In 1882, the dues (which were payable separately) having fallen into arrear, the manager of the temple sued to eject the defendants. Held that there was nothing to show that the defendants were more than tenants from year to year, and they had not acquired a right of occupancy. *Chockalinga Pillai v. 6. ——— Possessors of raiyati tenure—Test of raiyati interest as distinguished from mere right to collect rent.—Per FIXED, J.—The only test of a raiyati interest is to see in what condition the land was when the tenancy was created. If raiyats were already in possession of the land when the interest was created, and the interest was a right, not to the actual physical possession of the land, but to collect the rents from the raiyats, the interest is not raiyati. If, on the other hand, the land was jungle, or

The real question for trial is whether he was or was not a raiyat, or one who held land under cultivation by himself or others who took for him under his supervision as a superior cultivator; or whether he was a middleman because he really did not cultivate in the sense of s. 6, but was a general leaseholder or a speculator in land rent. *RAM MUNGUL GHOSH v. 30. ——— Liability to assessment of rent—Chur land—Jungleburi tenure.—R, a Hindu widow, granted a jungleburi tenure to certain tenants in respect of a chur belonging to her husband's estate. An amalnama was granted to the tenants signed by a karpardaz of R in respect of the tenure. R died in January 1861, and was succeeded by J and P, two daughters, the last of whom died on the 31st December 1880. On her death, her grandsons succeeded to the estate. On R's death, J and P got possession of all estate papers, and amongst them a dowl granted by the tenants in return for the amalnama. In 1865 proceedings were taken by the tenants to obtain kabulatis on the footing of those documents, which proceedings came to an end in 1868. In 1873 J and P instituted suits against the tenants, alleging the amalnama and dowl to be forgeries, and seeking to enhance the rents payable to them, as well as to have it declared that R's acts did not bind them. In these suits it was found that J and P had all along been aware of the claim made by the tenants that they held a permanent tenure, and the suits were dismissed on the ground that it was too late for J and P, after the lapse of twelve years from R's death, to raise the question. In 1884 D, a receiver, instituted a suit in the names of the grandsons to eject the tenants on amongst other grounds that the grandsons, reversi-ners, were not bound by R's acts, and that the jungleburi tenure was not binding on them; that the tenants were middlemen and had no right of occupancy; that at all events the plaintiffs were entitled to rent on the area of land then held by the defendants, as there had been large accretions to the amount covered by the amalnama and dowl. Held that, being middlemen, the defendants had no right of occupancy, and that, were the suit not dismissed for other grounds, they were liable to have the rent assessed on the whole amount of lands held by them, which was in excess of that covered by amalnama and dowl. *DROBOMOYI GUPTA v. 42. ——— Sir land—N. W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 8—Act X of 1859, s. 6—Occupancy tenure.—Where land, originally the sir of a proprietor, has been transferred to a mortgagee, and has in his hands lost its character of sir, and has been leased to a tenant on the usual conditions of a tenancy, which otherwise do not bar the acquisition of a right of occupancy in the land, such a right will be acquired by twelve years' occupancy under s. 8 of the Rent Act. In 1846 B mortgaged a share in a village, together with certain land which was recorded as his sir, and which was so described in the deed of mortgage. After the mortgage it ceased to be recorded as his sir, and was recorded as land held by tenants in the same way as other lands in the estate. In 1857 it was leased to S, and in 1863 to H, and from 1863 to 1882 remained in the possession of the last-mentioned lessee. In 1882 B redeemed the mortgage, and subsequently brought a suit against H to establish that the land was his sir, and for possession of it. Held by the Full Bench that there being nothing in terms of the mortgage-deed to indicate that the land was transferred to the mortgagee to be held as sir and the land having ceased to be recorded as the sir of the proprietor, and not having been leased as the sir of the lessor, it had not retained its character as sir when the defendant's tenancy commenced, so as to prevent him from acquiring a right of occupancy therein under the provisions of s. 8 of the Rent Act. Per MAHMOOD, J., that there is nothing in the law to prevent a zamindar from relinquishing his rights in sir land and converting it into land held by ordinary tenants; that the mortgage-deed of 1846 showed that the sir right in the land in suit had been relinquished by the mortgagor; and that the sir land once relinquished

54. ——— Land in Assam—Act X of 1859—Ejectment, Suit for.—Per MITTER and WHITE, JJ. (MACPHERSON, J., dissenting).—Act X of 1859 does not apply to lands situated in the Assam valley district. In a suit brought to eject a tenant of certain land situated in Assam, on the ground that he was a trespasser, where it was shown that he had held the land direct from the Government for a considerable time, and that the land had been made over during his tenancy to the plaintiff in exchange for certain other lands made over to the Government, and where the tenant claimed to have acquired a right of occupancy under Act X of 1859, and not to be liable to ejectment in the manner sought for,—Held per MITTER and WHITE, JJ., that as that Act did not

(c) MODE OF ACQUISITION.

56. — Nature of right—Right independent of wish of zamindar or mortgagee—Acquisition under usufructuary mortgage.—The right of occupancy conferred by the Legislature upon cultivators of more than twelve years' standing is a right wholly independent of the wishes either of the zamindar or his mortgagee in possession, and when a cultivator acquires such a right it cannot be taken as in the nature of a grant from either of them. The right of occupancy may thus be acquired during the currency of a usufructuary mortgage and during the period of the mortgagee's possession of the zamindari rights, and the zamindar upon redeeming the mortgage cannot disturb the possession of such occupancy tenants on the ground that, when he mortgaged the zamindari, it was free of such occupancy tenures. Haeroo v. Dhorre, 2 N. W., 129, referred to. HARPAL SINGH v. BAL GOBIND, I. L. R., 7 All., 586

57. — Conditions necessary for acquisition—Non-payment of rent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 6, 22, and 52.—Two conditions only are necessary for the acquiring of a right of occupancy,—viz., (1) the cultivation or holding of land for a period of twelve years; and (2) that the person holding or cultivating the land should be a raiyat. The essential conditions of s. 6, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, are fulfilled without showing the payment of rent, that only being a condition necessary for the maintaining of the right when created. In a suit brought to evict a tenant who had been in possession of certain land for a longer period than twelve years, when it was shown that rent had not been paid, and notice to quit had been given,—Held that a right of occupancy had been acquired, and that the raiyat had the power to prevent forfeiture under the provisions of s. 52, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. NARAIN ROY v. OPBIT MISSEK

58. — Holding and cultivating for twelve years—Acquisition previous to Rent Act, 1859.—After the permanent settlement and before Act X of 1859 a right of occupancy was not acquired by a raiyat merely by holding or cultivating land for a period of twelve years. When there is no contract, and the statute of limitation does not apply, the raiyat cannot, by occupying and cultivating, become the proprietor of the soil; neither can he, by occupying with the consent of the zamindar and paying rent for the land to him, become entitled to the proprietorship of the soil, even though he should acquire a right of occupancy by virtue of Act X of 1859. ISHOR GHOSH v. HILLS, W. R., F. B., 148

59. — Holding for twelve years partly before and partly after Rent Act—Act X of 1859, s. 6—Raiyat.—A holding for twelve years, whether wholly before or wholly after, or partly before and partly after, the passing of the Rent Act, entitled a raiyat to a right of occupancy under s. 6, Act X of 1859. THAKOORANEE DOSSEE v. BISHESH MOKERJEE

60. — Suits pending at time Act came into force—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 20, 21—Suit for ejectment.—S. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to suits pending at the time the Act came into force, viz., 1st November 1885, which had not then resulted in a decree. In a suit instituted on 8th October 1885 to eject the defendants after notice to quit it was held that, although the defendant had held the land from which it was sought to eject him for less than twelve years, and therefore would not, if the Bengal Rent Act VII of 1869 had been applicable, have acquired a right of occupancy, yet the effect of ss. 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was to give him a right of occupancy, and therefore he could not be ejected. JOGESSEER DAS v. AISANI KOTBURTO

[I. L. R., 14 Calc., 553]

61. — Holding under purchaser of permanent transferable interest in land—Reservation of rent—Relinquishment.—Any raiyat, holding under any purchaser of a permanent transferable interest in land can acquire a right of occupancy if he fulfil the other conditions required by the law; and the mere fact that a certain rent is reserved year by year does not interfere with his right unless something in his pottah is fatal to it. But the right may be extinguished by a relinquishment of the land. RUGHONATH SONAR v. MOKOOND DOSS

62. — Possession for twenty years under mirasi lease—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—When possession for twenty years, as on a mirasi lease, is found, the right of occupancy is inherent under the lease and under s. 6, Act X of 1859. GOVERN KANT BANERJEE v. GOLUCK CHUNDER

64. — Occupation by virtue of lease for term of years—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—A right of occupancy could not be acquired by occupation for twelve years under s. 6, Act X of 1859, when such occupation has been by virtue of a lease granting a term of years, and during the whole or part of such occupation the term had not expired. HUBBISH CHUNDER KOONDOL v. [Marsh., 479]

65. — Occupation under lease for fixed term—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—While land is held under a pottah which defines the period for which the land is to be held, no right of occupancy can accrue, although such a right may accrue under s. 6 in certain cases. SHADHOO JHA v. BHUGWAN CHUNDER OPADHIA

67. — Holding under customary right—Farmer of revenues—Duration of tenancy how regulated.—The principle laid down in Chockalinga Pillai v. Vythealinga Pundarasamuday, 6 Mad., 164, is that where a tenancy rests on contract only, the duration of the tenancy is regulated by the terms of the contract expressed or implied, and neither the Rent Act nor the Regulations operate to extend its duration. That decision does not derogate from any customary right. KRISHNASAMI PILLAI v. VARADABAJA. VARADABAJA v. VENKATACHALA PILLAI

68. — Holding as ijaradars during lease—Contract for renewal of lease—Beng. Act VIII of 1869 and Act X of 1859, s. 6.—By the terms of an ijara (1865) the defendants were entitled at the end of a term of five years to a renewal of their lease of the chur land in dispute, at a rent to be fixed according to the measurement of the land to be made at that time and to the productive powers of the land. Three years after the expiration of the said term a notice was served on the defendants to come to a new settlement with the plaintiff, and in 1874 the plaintiff sued to recover possession. The defendants claimed a right of occupancy acquired under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 or under Act X of 1859. Held that the defendants' holding as ijaradars prior to and during the lease of 1865 did not create in them a right of occupancy, and that the plaintiff had a right to turn the defendants out of possession at the expiration of the term of five years, except so far as that right was qualified by the stipulation for a renewal; that the defendants, at the expiration of that lease, had an equitable right to a renewal not exceeding five years, according to the stipulations in

70. — Holding as bhagdari tenure—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—Ordinarily a holding under a bhagdari tenure (i.e., upon a rent consisting of a portion of the produce) would establish a right of occupancy under s. 6, Act X of 1859. HURREHUR MOOKERJEE v. BIRESSUR BANERJEE

71. — Holding for long period—Payment of rent to one of several proprietors—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—A holding for twelve years under one of several proprietors gave a right of occupancy under s. 6, Act X of 1859, provided the tenant had paid the rent, which payment he may, in the absence of fraud, make to any one of the co-proprietors whom he chooses. MOOKTAKESHEE DOSSES v. 73. — Act X of 1859, s. 6.—During the plaintiff's absence on imprisonment and transportation, the defendant took possession of land which previously belonged to him as a tenant and the landlord allowed the defendant to hold as his tenant. He held possession for more than twelve years. Held under s. 6, Act X of 1859, the plaintiff acquired a right of occupancy against the landlord. DOMUN v. SUDUNKOOLAH

74. — Possession as intruder—Right of intruder to hold house of absconding raiyat.—Held that the defendant, having failed to prove his right of possession to the house of an absconding raiyat, either by sale or mortgage, was an intruder upon the holding of such raiyat, and did not, by making additions or alterations, acquire any right against the zamindar who was not shown to have assented to such additions or alterations. KUNDHYEE v. 1 Agra, 9

75. — Possession obtained by fraud—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—Possession obtained and continued by fraud was not possession within the meaning of Act X of 1859, s. 6, so as to give a right of occupancy. BHOOBUNJOY ACHARJEE v. RAM NARAIN CHOWDHRY

76. ——— Possession and payment of rent to party without title—Act X of 1859, s. 6.—The mere fact that the person to whom he for some years paid rent had no title could not prevent his counting those years towards a right of occupancy under Act X of 1859. AMBER HOSSEIN v. 77. ——— Occupying and cultivating land under person without title—Nature of raiyat's right.—A raiyat occupying and cultivating land for more than twelve years under a landlord who has no title to the land, nevertheless acquires a right of occupancy. The right is not one conferred by any lessor. It is a right which, by virtue of the law, grows up in the raiyat from the mere circumstance of cultivating the land for twelve years or upwards and paying rent due thereon. ZOLFUN BIBER v. MAHOMED ALI 25 W. R., 114

80. ——— Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 6—Effect of such proviso on acquisition of right.—The mere fact of a lease being granted for a particular term, even where there is an express provision for re-entry by the lessor, does not prevent the accrual of an occupancy right under s. 6 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 to a raiyat who continuously occupies for more than twelve years, nor is a right of occupancy already acquired destroyed by a grant of such lease. MUKHTAR BAHADUR v. In reference to this, it was held that a lessee of land continuously in cultivating possession for a period of twelve years, under several written leases or pottahs which were for specified terms of years, but in which there was no express stipulation for the landlord's re-entry on their expiration, had a right of occupancy. The mere existence of a term in a lease was not an "express stipulation" to the contrary, within the meaning of s. 7, so as to exclude the right of occupancy. The

In a suit for the recovery of possession, with mesne profits, of land, brought by a lessor against the tenant holding over, the defence was, as to part of the land, that the tenant had a right of occupancy, his cultivating possession having lasted for more than twelve years. But non sequitur that, if there is a more remote collateral who was a sharer in the cultivation of the occupancy holding, he is entitled to succeed in preference to a nearer collateral who did not so share in the cultivation. *Badri Das v. 109. ——— Agreement restricting right of occupancy—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 178, Applicability of, to suits pending when Act came into force.—S. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) has no application to suits instituted before the date on which that Act came into force. So where a landlord sued to eject a tenant who had executed a solenamah agreeing to hold the land in suit for a specified period at a specified rent, and providing that the landlord was to be at liberty to enter on the lands at the expiry of the period, and the suit was instituted on the 6th October 1885, and where it was found that at the date of the solenamah the tenant had acquired a right of occupancy with respect to the lands in suit, Held that the tenant was not entitled to the benefits conferred by s. 178, cl. 1, sub-cl. (c), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but was liable to be ejected. MOHESHWAR PERSHAD NARAIN SINGH v. SHEORABAN MAHTO. MOHESHWAR PERSHAD NARAIN SINGH v. DURSUN BAUT. I. L. R., 14 Calc., 621

110. ——— Purchase by tenant of fractional share of proprietary interest, Effect of, on acquisition of right of occupancy—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 6.—A tenant, who had commenced to occupy his holding on the 13th April 1871, acquired by purchase in the year 1878 a fractional share of the proprietary interest, and continued to occupy the holding as raiyat till the 13th May 1885, when he was dispossessed. On the 30th March 1886 he instituted a suit to recover possession, alleging that he had acquired a right of occupancy. It was contended that, owing to the purchase of the share of the proprietary interest, he could not have acquired such right. Held that under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 there was nothing to prevent such right being acquired by the plaintiff if after his purchase he continued to hold the land as a raiyat and if the relation of landlord and tenant existed between himself on the one hand and the proprietors on the other, and if the period for which he so held extended for twelve years from the date of the commencement of his holding. *GUR BUKSH ROY alias GUR BUKSH SINGH v. A zur-i-peshgi lease is not a mere contract for the cultivation of the land at a rent, but is a security to the tenant for his money advanced. Two of the leases were zur-i-peshgi, or made on money advanced by the lessee to the lessor. The tenant's possession in this case was, in part at least, that of a creditor operating payment to himself, and was no foundation for a claim for occupancy rights. As to the effect of written stipulations contrary to the latter, s. 7 of the Bengal Rent Law, Act X of 1859, is superseded, if not wholly repealed, by s. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. *BENGAL INDIGO CO. v. 114. ——— Interest in land—Proprietorship of the soil.—A raiyat having a mere right of occupancy, and not a right to hold at a fixed rate of rent, has not such an interest in the land as gives him a right to a share of the rent. He has simply a right to occupy the land in preference to any other tenant, so long as he pays a fair and equitable rent. A Judge cannot fix the term in suits by a landlord for rent or for kabuliata, as can be done in a suit by a raiyat having a right of occupancy for the delivery of a pottah. *HILLS v. ISHORN GHOSH. W. The zamindari, being sold in 1871 for arrears of Government revenue, was purchased by the plaintiff, who gave B notice to quit, and on his refusal brought a suit to eject him. Held that, by ceasing himself to hold or cultivate the land, it might be considered that A had abandoned his right, or that the right had ceased. Therefore, where a non-transferable right of occupancy was transferred, and the transferee was in actual possession of the soil, tilling and using it for his own benefit. Held that the zamindar had a right of suit against the transferee to recover possession of the land. 143. ———— Custom or usage, Nature of evidence to prove—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 183, Ill. (1).—In suits by a landlord for ejectment of purchasers from raiyats having only a right of occupancy on the ground that the holdings of such raiyats were not transferable without the landlord's consent, the defendants pleaded custom or usage in support of the transfers. Questions arose as to the character of the usage required to be proved in such cases and the nature of the evidence required to prove the usage. In second appeal the High Court, (1) upon a review of the previous law on the subject, held that, however the law may have been previously declared, as it is now expressed in the Bengal Tenancy Act, s. 183, Ill. 1, a transfer in accordance with usage is valid even without the consent of the landlord. (2) After applying the principles laid down by the Privy Council as regards evidence of mercantile usage in the case of Juggomohun Ghose v. Maniok Chand, 7 Moore's I. A., 263, —Held that it would be necessary in these cases either to prove the existence of the usage on the landlord's estate or that it is so prevalent in the neighbourhood that it can reasonably be presumed to exist on that estate. The finding of the lower Appellate Court on the existence of the usage being founded on irrelevant matters, the case was remanded for re-trial. PALAKDHARI RAI v. MANNERS . . . I L. in s. 183 and "local usage" in cl. (d), sub-s. (8), of s. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—(1) The word "usage" would include what the people are now or recently in the habit of doing in a particular place. (2) In deciding on the evidence of such a custom or usage, regard should be had to s. 48 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). (3) A judgment of the High Court as to the transferability of similar tenures in an adjoining village of the same pergunnah is admissible as evidence of such usage under s. 42 of the Evidence Act. DALGLISH v. GUZUFFER HASSAIN. I. L. R., 23 Cal., 427

In the same case after remand it was held that, to establish that occupancy holdings are transferable in accordance with local usage, it is necessary to adduce evidence of purchases or transfer by persons other than the landlords made with the knowledge but without the consent of the latter and to which no objection was made by the latter. The words "custom" and "usage" are not synonymous terms, and the same kind of evidence as would be required to prove a custom is not necessary when the existence of a local usage is in question. A long period of time must elapse, before a custom in respect of the transferability of occupancy holdings can grow up: but this is not the case with regard to the growth of usage in respect of the matter. The "usage" to which ss. 178 and 183 refer is not restricted to a usage existing at the time of the passing of the Act, but it includes usage which may have subsequently grown up. DALGLISH v. Act VIII of 1885, ss. 59-64—Landlord and tenant—Want of saleable interest in judgment-debtor—Rights of purchaser.*—The Bengal Tenancy Act does not contemplate or provide for the sale of a holding at the instance of one only of several joint landlords who has obtained a decree for the share of the rent separately due to him; such a sale must be under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and would not carry with it the special incidents attaching to a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act. When therefore an occupancy-holding, not transferable by custom or local usage, is sold in execution of a decree obtained by one of several joint landlords for the share of the rent separately due to him, the purchaser acquires nothing by his purchase, the judgment-debtor having no saleable interest in the holding. Beni Madhub Roy v. Transfer of raiyat's interest —Abandonment—Forfeiture—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 6. A mokurari mirasi pottah was granted in 1838 to A. who was found to have held thereunder as a raiyat till 1859, when his right, title, and interest were sold in execution of a decree and purchased by B, and the latter was accepted as tenant by, and paid rent to, the zamindar for nearly twelve years. The zamindari, being sold in 1871 for arrears of Government revenue, was purchased by the plaintiff, who gave B notice to quit, and on his refusal brought the present suit to eject him. Held that the right of occupancy which A had acquired under s. 6 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 at the time of the sale to B was not transferable. *NARENDRA NARAYAN ROY CHOWDERY v. Abandonment—

Status of purchaser as regards zamindar.—A tenant having a right of occupancy cannot create an intermediate tenure between himself and the zamindar. If a raiyat not having a transferable tenure quits possession, makes over his interests, and gives over the land to a third person, he may be treated as having abandoned all rights formerly possessed by him in the land. When a purchaser takes possession of a non-transferable tenure, and interposes himself between the zamindar and the raiyat on the land, he thereby commits a wrong, and the zamindar may sue to declare that no interest is vested in such purchaser or to restrain him from interfering with the collection of rent. *HUREHUR MOOKERJEE v. ejection of the vendees, who had obtained possession of the land. It was found that the zamindars had consented to the sale to the vendees, and received from them arrears of rent due on the holding by the vendors, and had recognized them as tenants. Held on appeal under the Letters Patent that the sale-deed was invalid with reference to the provisions of ss. 2 and 23 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as its object was the transfer of occupancy rights which was prohibited by s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873. Held also that the zamindars having accepted the vendees as tenants and taken rent from them, a tenancy was thereby constituted under the rent law; that the vendees were therefore not trespassers; and that therefore the question as to ejection did not fall within the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. *JHINGURI TEWARI v. Where certain tenants with a right of occupancy mortgaged portions of their holdings, and the zamindar assented to the substitution of the mortgagees for the original tenants in respect of those portions of the holding of which they had respectively obtained possession, it was held that the zamindar could not destroy the interest of the mortgagees in possession by obtaining a decree from the Revenue Court ousting only the original tenants. GOBERDHUN v. Subsequently, the landlord instituted a suit for ejectment, on the ground that by the mortgage the tenant had committed an act inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was let, within the meaning of Act XII of 1881 (N.-W. Parsotam Das, I. L. R., 5 All., 121, and Naik Ram Singh v. Murli Dhar, I. L. R., 4 All., 871, referred to. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—The terms of s. 93 (b) of the N.-W. P. 185. ——— N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 93 (b)—Mortgage by ex-proprietary tenant—Act "inconsistent with the purpose for which land was let"—Act XII of 1881, ss. 9, 56.—The policy of the framers of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881) was not to protect the interest of the purchaser of proprietary rights, but that of the person whose proprietary rights have been sold, and who has become an ex-proprietary tenant. It would be straining the law, as laid down in s. 93 (b) of the Act, to hold that a mortgage of his holding granted by an ex-proprietary tenant was an act "inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was let" within the meaning of that provision. The words quoted have reference to something which may alter the character of the land, or cause injury to the land and thus to the landholder. In the case of a mortgage by an ex-proprietary tenant, the landholder would not be damaged by being unable, in the event of his rent being in arrear, to distrain the crops grown upon the land by the so-called mortgagee, s. 56 of the Rent Act giving the landholder a right to distrain any crops growing upon the land, by whomsoever grown, in respect of which the arrear arises. *Debi Prasad v. 186. ——— N.-W. P. Rent Act, (XII of 1881), ss. 7, 9—Sir land—Sale of sir land by co-sharer—Ex-proprietary tenant.—Held by PETHERAM, C.J., and STRAIGHT, OLDFIELD, and BRODHURST, J.J., that the question whether the proprietary rights of a co-sharer in the sir of a mehal are distinct and separate from the proprietary rights in the mehal itself, so as to enable the owner of one share to sell and give possession of his sir alone as against his co-sharers, must be determined with reference to the tenure and conditions under which land is held in the mehal by the co-parceners, to be ascertained in each case. Per PETHERAM, C.J., and STRAIGHT and OLDFIELD, J.J.—In zamindari tenures, in which the whole land is held and managed in common, a co-sharer cannot convey his right of occupancy in the sir as something distinct from his proprietary rights in the mehal. In puttidari tenures, in which the lands are divided and held in severalty, each proprietor managing his own lands, there may be lands which come within the classification of sir given in the Rent Act, but they would not seem to be on a different footing from any other land held in severalty by a proprietor. Per BRODHURST, J.—So long as a person is the sole proprietor of a mehal, he is not restrained by any law from effecting a sale of his proprietary rights in his sir land, even though he retains possession of the whole of the other lands of the mehal. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That the proprietary rights of a joint co-sharer in his sir land form an essential part of his rights in the mehal; that such proprietary rights in the sir land may be sold, but that the purchaser under such a sale could not obtain any such possession as would operate indefeasance of the exproprietary right in such sir land conferred by

The zamindars sued the heirs of the conditional vendee for foreclosure and possession of the mortgaged property. Held by the Full Bench that the terms of the judgment of the Full Bench in Naik Ram Singh v. Murlu Dhar, I. L. R., 4 All., 371, were directly applicable to the case, and that the transaction of mortgage, which was subsequently to become a sale, was not a transaction to which s. 2 of the Rent Act applied, because the sale would not have effect till after the Act came into operation. MURLI RAI v. A., 295, referred to. Held therefore, where an occupancy tenant transferred his holding, that the transfer was not only invalid in respect of the holding, but in respect also of the trees on the holding. Where an occupancy tenant, under the impression that he was a tenant at fixed rates, sold his holding, and the landholder sued the tenant and his vendee to set aside the transfer as contrary to law, and for possession of the holding,—Held that the transfer could not be treated as a relinquishment by the tenant of the holding to the landholder, and that the proper decree to make was that the transfer should be cancelled, that the plaintiff was entitled to eject the vendee from the land, but the plaintiff was not entitled to take the holding from the vendor. *KASIM MIAN v. The Court then adjourned, and on the following day the attorney stated that, on re-consideration, he did not intend to call witnesses. The Judge allowed the prosecutor to reply. Held that, though the strict interpretation of ss. 289 and 292 of the Criminal Procedure Code would warrant this course, it was never meant by the Legislature that the prosecutor should have a reply when no witnesses are called for the defence, the object of the law being evidently to let each side have an opportunity of commenting on the evidence of the other, and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecutor in such a case as the present. *HURRY CHURN CHUCKERBUTTY v. 13. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 289, 292—Adducing evidence for the defence—Documents produced for cross-examination of Crown witness—Practice.—In a trial before a High Court or a Court of Session, evidence for the defence cannot be adduced until the close of the case for the prosecution; but counsel for the defence may, while a witness for the Crown is under cross-examination, put documents to him, and if in so doing counsel reads or causes to be read to the Court such documents, he thereby impliedly undertakes to put those documents in as evidence at the proper time. When such documents as aforesaid are filed in Court as evidence, or any other documentary evidence is put in by the defence, the defence has "adduced evidence" within the meaning of ss. 289 et seq. of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so as to give the prosecution a right of reply, though no witnesses may be called for the defence. In a trial at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court during the cross-examination of one of the witnesses for the Crown, counsel for the defence put certain documents to the witness, and these were read to the Court and jury and marked as exhibits as evidence for the defence, and were filed with the record in the same way as the evidence for the prosecution had been marked and filed. During the cross-examination of the next witness a similar course was pursued, and, after the cross-examination had continued for some time, counsel for the defence applied to the Court for a ruling as to whether the fact of documents having been used during cross-examination in the manner above stated would, under s. 292 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, entitle the Crown to a reply, in the event of the accused not calling witnesses. Held that although, as a matter of order, such a question would be better raised either when the first document intended to be used in this way was put to a witness or when the accused was asked if he meant to adduce evidence, yet there was nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure to prevent the Court from deciding the question at any other stage, and that, under the special circumstances of the case, it might be considered then. Held also that the use of the documents in the manner above stated gave the prosecution a right of reply. *Queen-Empress v. 9. ——— Interest as Collector of revenue of Government—Suit for accretion.—A chur, B, formed by gradual accretion to an estate (mouzah B), was resumed by Government, who successively made temporary settlements for it with the patnidar of mouzah B, and finally with the zamindar. While the second settlement was in force, another chur formed, and a dispute arose between the patnidar of B and the patnidar of an adjoining mouzah, D, as to its ownership. Three suits were brought by the latter, claiming the second chur as an accretion to his estate, in all which suits he was successful, and in one of which Government was a party. Government then sued to set aside the decrees in the two suits in which it was not a party, and for possession of the land in dispute, and it was found in that suit that the land was continuous to chur B, and not to mouzah D. Held that Government, having a right to revenue, but not to actual possession, could have no locus standi as plaintiff in such a suit. MOOKTAKESHEE DEBBA v. 10. ——— Interest of lambardar—Suit for sums paid as nuzzeraana before resumption.—A certain sum was paid to Government as nuzzeraana during the existence of the maafi grant through a lambardar. After the maafi was resumed and a Government jumma assessed upon it, the nuzzeraana continued to be paid until the interest of the holder of the resumed maafi was confiscated for rebellion and sold at auction. After the confiscation, Government allowed the amount to the lambardar by deducting it from the amount of Government revenue paid by him. Held that by such arrangement the Government did in effect convey to him (lambardar), as trustee on behalf of Government, such an interest in the estate as would enable him to sue, and enforce such claim. ZAHOOB HOSSEIN v. ASSUD ALI 2 Agra, Pt. II, 178

11. ——— Interest under decree—Suit for balance due on decree—Decree for money.—The appellant, having obtained a decree for money, sued to recover the unsatisfied balance thereof from the respondents, alleging that the property of the deceased judgment-debtor (being one-seventh share in the legacy of his father) was in their possession. He prayed that, after due inquiry, adjustment of accounts, and the determination of the value of the said legacy out of the share which might be found due to the judgment-debtor, the above-mentioned balance might be decreed with interest and costs. Held that the decree did not vest in the appellant a right to the property sued for, and consequently he could not maintain the suit. MAHOMED AGA ALI KHAN v. 15. ——— Enhancement of rent, Suit for—Right of a Hindu widow to sue for enhancement of rent as representing the estate of the deceased zamindar or as guardian of a minor son adopted to him by her.—A Hindu widow, representing a zamindari interest in a mehal, sued for the rent upon a rent-paying tenure at an enhanced rate. She had, in former years, adopted a son to her deceased husband. The defendant objected throughout that, this son (deceased in 1884) having been of full age in 1881 when this suit was brought, the widow was not entitled to sue at that time, he having that right. Held that the Courts below had rightly disallowed this objection. There was no sufficient evidence to show that the adopted son had attained majority when this suit was brought, and the plaintiff could sue either in her character as widow of the deceased or as guardian of the minor adopted son. SURJA KANT ACHARYA v. suit in which he claimed to set aside as fraudulent a mortgage on which the defendant had obtained a decree against the vendees, and the decree itself. He based his right to maintain the suit upon his liability under his covenant. The vendees were not parties to the suit. Held that, as the defendant's mortgage had merged in his decree, the suit could only be maintained if the plaintiff could show himself entitled to have the defendant's decree set aside, and that he had shown no interest which would entitle him to maintain a suit for such a purpose. *JHUNA v. 21. ——— Re-admission to caste — Contract to procure admission to caste—Contract made by head of a caste in representative capacity not enforceable by him after he has ceased to hold office.—The defendant was the eldest of three brothers whose mother on her marriage had been put out of the Lovana caste for having married a man belonging to a different caste. The defendant was anxious that he and his brothers should be re-admitted to the caste; and in 1864 he entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, who was at that time one of the setias of the caste, whereby the latter agreed to procure the admission of the plaintiff and his brothers and get them married to girls belonging to the caste. In consideration of these services, the defendant was to pay the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 5,000, which sum was to become due on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother to a girl of the caste, and to be expended in purchasing caste utensils, which were to be kept for the use of the caste. The plaintiff alleged that part of this money had been already paid to him, and that on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother in 1880 he had demanded payment of the balance (viz., Rs. 149), which the defendant had not paid. He now sued to recover this balance. One of the witnesses at the hearing was the setia of the caste who had succeeded the plaintiff in that position. He stated that he and other leaders of the caste to whom he had spoken, disapproved of this suit. Held that the suit was not maintainable. The agreement was made with the plaintiff as one of the heads of the caste. It was made with him in his representative, not in his personal, capacity, and the benefit of the agreement accrued, not to him, but to the caste. It was therefore for the caste to say whether they wished to enforce the agreement. The plaintiff, however, had lost his position as one of the heads of the caste in 1869, and was no longer the spokesman or the representative of the caste. His successor had told the Court that the leaders of the caste disapproved, as he did himself, of this suit. Under these circumstances, the suit was not maintainable. *PITAMBER BATANSI v. "Person who is interested in the payment of money."—The defendant having improperly refused to perform the marriage ceremony of his niece, the daughter of his undivided brother (deceased), the widow of the latter herself performed the ceremony, borrowing money for the purpose, and sued her late husband's said brother (the defendant) to recover the amount expended on the marriage. On its being contended that defendant was under no obligation to provide for the expenses of his brother's daughter's marriage,—Held that defendant was liable, the marriage having been properly performed. Held further that the suit was maintainable, though it had been brought by the mother of the bride, and not by the bride herself. Seemle—That the mother was, within the meaning of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act, interested in making the payment which had given rise to the action. It was not necessary for her to prove that she had been compelled to make it or that she had made it at the defendant's request. VAIKUNTAM AMMANGAR v. KALLAPPAAN AYYANGAR [I. L. R., 23 Mad., 512]

The occupancy-tenant died after the suit was filed, but before he had received notice of it, and the transferee, being, in sole possession of the occupancy-holding, defended the suit. Held, under the above circumstances, that the zamindar's suit must fail, inasmuch as at the time when it was filed he was not entitled to immediate possession of the occupancy-holding. GULZAR SINGH v. when the conditional sale takes place, and not when it becomes absolute; and therefore, where a conditional sale took place in 1867, and after it had become absolute a person sued to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the property sold, basing his claim upon a special agreement made in the interval between the date of the conditional and the date that it became absolute, and alleging that his cause of action arose on the latter date, that the suit was not maintainable, the plaintiff having no right of pre-emption at the time of the conditional sale. LACHMAN PRASAD v. 33. — Mortgage—Conditional sale.—The cause of action of a person claiming a right of pre-emption in respect of a mortgage by way of conditional sale arises on foreclosure of such mortgage, that is to say, on the expiration of the year of grace without payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage-money, inasmuch as, on the expiration of such period, the mortgagee acquires a proprietary title to the mortgaged property. Such person can therefore sue to enforce his right of pre-emption on the expiration of such period, and need not wait to do so until the mortgagee has obtained proprietary possession of the mortgaged property. HAZARI RAM v. 36. — First and second mortgagees—Dispossession of second mortgagee—Limitation—Interest.—Z, being indebted to A, executed in his favour a written mortgage of certain lands, in which it was agreed that, if the debt was not repaid within a fixed time, A should be put into possession of the lands. Subsequently Z executed in favour of P, to whom also he owed money, a second mortgage of the same land subject to the same condition. P, not receiving payment within the stipulated time, sued Z on the mortgage, and obtained a decree for possession of the lands, under which he was put into possession in the year 1846. After P had obtained his decree, A, whose debt had likewise remained unpaid, brought a suit as first mortgagee against Z and P for the possession of the lands, and, obtaining a decree, recovered possession in the year 1847, dispossessing P. In the year 1870 the heirs of Z, having paid off the debt due to A, resumed possession, whereupon the heirs of P applied to be restored to possession in execution of the decree obtained by P in 1846. This application having been rejected on the ground that that decree had been fully executed when P obtained possession under it, the heirs of P instituted a suit against the heirs of Z to recover possession and for interest during the time they were dispossessed. Held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, reversing the decision of the High Court, that the heirs of P were entitled to possession on A's mortgage being paid off, and that their cause of action accrued and limitation ran against them from the time when the heirs of Z resumed possession. Held also that they were not entitled to a decree for the interest accruing during the time they were dispossessed. NARAIN SINGH v. The Appellate Court reversed the decree, upon the ground that, as a partition can be enforced on behalf of minors only when it can be proved to be necessary for the protection of the minors' interest, the cause of action did not survive to the minors. Held by the High Court that this was not a universal rule, and the Court of first instance having allowed the suit to be revived, considering that it had been brought on grounds which entitled the minors to the partition, the competency of the plaintiff to proceed with the suit was not open to objection in the lower Appellate Court. PARVATHI v. RIGHT OF SUIT—continued.3. SURVIVAL OF RIGHT—concluded.

(1882), ss. 361 and 371—Cause of action—Abatement of suit—Substitution of parties.—The language of ss. 361 and 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to abatement of a suit show that, where it is sought to revive a suit on the death of the plaintiff, the cause of action of the original and revived suit must be the same, and that no fresh cause of action can be imported into the revived suit. Where a suit was brought to have it declared that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed as mohant of the Tarkessur shrine on the allegations (a) that he had been selected as the chela or disciple of the deceased mohant; (b) that the ceremony of initiation had been duly performed, by which he was brought into the brotherhood of his gurus; and (c) that the installation ceremony had been performed with the consent of the dasnami, and that by virtue thereof he became the mohant, and exercised the functions of that office; and on the death of the plaintiff an application to be substituted in his place was made on grounds which put the applicant into opposition to the original plaintiff and made his claim not dependant on the original plaintiff's case but in conflict with it.—Held that the right of suit could not be said to survive to the applicant within the meaning of the sections of the Code relating to abatement of suit, but that the suit abated by the death of the plaintiff. SHAM CHAND GIRI v. 50. ——— Claim to guardianship based on a will does not survive to claimant's representative—Death of appellant pending appeal—Abatement of appeal—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 7, 8, 13.—One K applied to be the guardian of the person and property of her minor son. Her application was opposed by G, the grand-mother of the minor, who alleged that she has been appointed guardian by the will of the minor's father. The Judge found the will not proved, and he appointed K to be guardian. G appealed, and, pending the appeal, she died. G's brother, one M, thereupon applied for leave to prosecute the appeal as G's representative. Held, refusing the application, that the appeal must abate by reason of G's death. Her appointment, alleged to have been made under the will, was a matter of personal preference and trust. A claim based on personal trust could not survive to her representative. GANGABAI v. 52. ——— Suit for damages for refusal of license by excise authorities—Liability of Government—21 & 22 Vict., c. 106—Matter of revenue—21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 8.—The plaintiff, for some years before and up to 31st March 1874, carried on the business of a retail dealer in ganja and sidhi in Calcutta, and occupied for that purpose certain shops and godowns duly licensed under the Government regulations with respect to such sales. The license had to be renewed annually, and might, for sufficient cause, be withdrawn at any time within the year which terminated on 31st March. On 4th March 1874, while the plaintiff was carrying on his business, the Superintendent of Excise for Calcutta put the right to sell ganja and sidhi for the year commencing the 18th April 1874 up to the public competition, which was the usual way of distributing the yearly licenses. The sale notification contained a list of the shops with the localities where they were situated, but the right was reserved, in case of combination or for other cause, to transfer, before settlement, any shop from the locality specified to some locality in the neighbourhood; and the conditions of sale were stated to be "that the Collector does not bind himself to accept the highest bid; that the settlement with the accepted auction-purchasers will be contingent on the approval by the police authorities of the proposed locality of the shop, and the character of the applicant for license; that the person accepted as the auction-purchaser shall deposit at once a sum equal to the license fee payable for two months, and shall at the same time state in writing in what building his shop will be opened, it being understood that the above deposit will be returned to any person whose license is subsequently refused for police reason." At the sale the plaintiff was the highest bidder for the licenses for five shops for the sale of ganja and sidhi, and his bids were recorded; and he also paid the deposit due in respect of the licenses amounting to Rs. 8. Subsequently the excise authorities refused licenses to the plaintiff for the five shops, and failed to return the deposit made in respect thereof. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Secretary of State in Council for India, in which he alleged that the Government had accepted his bid, and thereby contracted with him to give him the licenses and allow him to carry on his trade in ganja and sidhi, and that by their not giving him licenses and so forcing him to close his godowns and shops they had committed a breach of contract for which he was entitled to damages.—Held on the evidence per PHEAR, J., that there was no contract between the plaintiff and the Government. Held also both in the Court below and on appeal, even assuming there was a contract, that the suit was not maintainable, being in respect of acts done by the Government in the exercise of sovereign powers. Suits such as might, previous to the passing of 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, have been brought against the East India Company, and subsequently against the Secretary of State in Council, are limited to suits for acts done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private individuals without

53. ——— Suit for illegal levy of import duties by Collector.—In 1877 B shipped salt from Bombay to Malabar ports, having conformed to the provisions of the Bombay Salt Act, 1873, and paid Rs. 13-0 per maund, the full duty then leviable under the Tariff Act, 1875. By a notification under cl. B, s. 6, of the Tariff Act, the Governor General in Council had exempted salt which paid the excise duty at Bombay from liability to pay more than the difference between what was so paid and the import duty leviable under the Tariff Act. While the salt was in transit, the Salt Act of 1877, which raised the import duty to Rs. 2-8-0 a maund, came into force. The Collector of Malabar levied 11 annas a maund on the salt imported, in the belief that he was so authorized by law, and his action was ratified by Government. Held that, assuming the Collector's acts to be illegal, a suit to recover the amount so levied would lie against the Secretary of State for India in Council. Held also that the payment at Bombay was not a payment of import duty by anticipation, and that the plaintiff was not excused by the notification of the Governor General from paying the amount levied by the Collector. NOBIN CHUNDER DEY v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, I. L. R., 1 Cal., 11, dissented from. Held on appeal that the acts of State of which the Municipal Courts of British India are debarred from taking cognizance are acts done in the exercise of sovereign powers which do not profess to be justified by municipal law. Where an act complained of is professedly done under the sanction of municipal law and in the exercise of powers conferred by that law, the fact that it is done by the sovereign power, and is not an act which could possibly be done by a private individual, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. HARI BHANJI v. refusal of the Government to confer the proprietary rights in such land on the plaintiff, and the grant by it of such rights to such person, were acts done in the exercise of sovereign powers. Held per STUART, C.J., that the Government had entered into the contract alleged by the plaintiff; that the suit would lie, as the Government had not entered into such contract in the exercise of sovereign powers, but in the capacity of a private owner; but that the plaintiff's case failed, as he had not performed his part of such contract. KISHEN CHAND v. 61. ———— Suit to enforce award—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 525.—Disputes between the members of a Hindu family were referred to arbitrators who made an award as to how the whole of the property should be divided. In pursuance of the award, part of the moveable property was divided. Subsequently one of the members of the family died. The plaintiff, another member of the family, now sued to enforce the award, or in the alternative, for partition. Held that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, s. 525, did not preclude the plaintiff from suing to enforce the award. Gopi Reddi v. 63. ———— Suit for compensation awarded by punchayet in accordance with caste custom.—The plaintiff sued the defendants, his wife and her father (first and second defendants), to recover damages for the non-performance of a contract whereby the defendants agreed to deliver to the plaintiff a specified quantity of grain. The plaintiff and the first defendant appeared before a punchayet composed of members of their caste, and the first defendant having refused to live any longer with the plaintiff, the punchayet awarded the compensation claimed, and the defendants promised to deliver the grain. It was found that the award of the punchayet was in accordance with the custom of the caste in cases in which the wife refused to live with the husband. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit. SOORBA TEVAN v. 65. ———— Award as to settlement—Beng. Reg. IX of 1833, s. 9—Necessity to set aside award.—It was held that a suit to obtain possession of a moiety of certain lands by establishment of the title of the plaintiffs as purchasers and the cancelment of an award of arbitrators, was not barred by s. 9 of Regulation IX of 1833. The award was brought about, not under that Regulation, but owing to an application of the plaintiff for a partition of the share under Regulation VII of 1822, which application was rejected in reference to the award declaring the plaintiff's vendors were not in possession at the time of the sale. It was not necessary that the award should be set aside prior to an adjudication on the claim, as it determined no question of title. If the disposition of the vendors did not take place at a period more remote than twelve years before the commencement of the suit, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession on establishment of their right, even if there was no sufficient reason to set aside the award. GUNGA BAKSH v. 68. ———— Erection of buildings by owners of adjoining sites under agreements with Government—Government surveyor made arbiter in case of dispute—Party wall, Liability of owners for costs of—Suit before obtaining Government surveyor's certificate.—Under separate agreements made by them respectively with Government, the plaintiff and defendant held adjoining plots of land for building. The agreements contained the same terms and stipulations, among which were the following: "(a) The buildings to be continuous, with party walls common to both adjoining houses. (b) All disputes regarding the cost and maintenance of party walls to be decided by the Government surveyor, whose decision shall be binding on both parties." The plaintiff employed a contractor to erect a house upon his plot of land. The house was completed in 1870, the north wall of which was built as a party wall in pursuance of the condition contained in the agreement with Government. Disputes subsequently arose between the plaintiff and his contractor, which were not settled until the 26th August 1878, on which date the plaintiff paid the contractor a sum of ₹20,515 4-11, which included the cost of the party wall. After the plaintiff's house had been completed, the defendant built his house upon the adjoining land, and in so doing he used a large portion of the party wall as the southern wall of his house. He paid the plaintiff half the cost of the portion so used by him. The rear portion of the said wall was not used by the defendant, as his house did not extend so far to the rear as the house of the plaintiff. The plaintiff demanded payment of half the cost of that part of the wall not used by the defendants, but the defendants refused to pay. The plaintiff then claimed that part of the wall as his own property, and proceeded to open windows in it. The defendants objected. The plaintiff subsequently filed the present suit, claiming from the defendants payment of half the cost of the said portion of the wall not used by the defendants, and in the event of such payment not being awarded, he prayed for a declaration that he was the sole owner of the said portion of the wall, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from disturbing him in the sole enjoyment thereof. Both the defendants pleaded limitation, and denied their liability to pay any part of the cost of that part of the wall which they did not use. The first defendant further alleged that he had paid the whole cost of the foundation and other parts of the said wall, and claimed to set off this payment against the claim of the plaintiff. At the original hearing SCOTT, J., held that the part of the wall in dispute, although not used by the defendants, was a party wall, having regard to the terms of the agreement under which the said wall was erected; and that the suit was not barred, but that there was no right of action for the cost of the party wall independently of the award of the Government surveyor, in whose decision lay all disputes as to such cost; and that, until his decision was given, there was no complete cause of action. SCOTT, J., accordingly, on 11th December 1882, decreed that the defendants were severally liable to pay the half of whatever sum the Government surveyor might certify to be due for the cost of the disputed part of the said wall, and that the defendants were entitled to set off, in the calculation of what was due from them, the cost of any work or materials which the Government surveyor might find had been contributed by the first defendant. The case was thereupon adjourned, in order that the certificate of the Government surveyor might be obtained. The Government surveyor subsequently gave his certificate as to the cost of the unused portion of the said wall, but stated that on the evidence before him he was unable to decide as to the ownership of the foundations, etc., of the wall.

RIGHT OF SUIT—continued.9. BUILDING, SUIT TO RESTRAIN—concluded.

The case came on again before SCOTT, J., who decided to take evidence on the points left undetermined by the Government surveyor. Witnesses were accordingly examined, and on 11th December 1883 the Court disallowed the defendant's claim of set-off, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for half the sum certified by the Government surveyor as the cost of the disputed part of the wall. The defendants appealed. Held that, having regard to the terms of the agreement under which the plaintiff and defendants respectively held their property, the Court was not competent to determine the question of the defendant's set-off or the other points raised by the pleadings. These were matters to be decided by the Government surveyor, whose certificate was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue, and upon which the Court might give judgment. 69. ——— Suit for removal of obstruction in building—Alteration in building.—The alteration of any building does not give the right to a suit to remove it or restore it to its original condition, unless the building in consequence of such alteration obstructs or impedes the access to the plaintiff's premises improperly, or takes away any frontage right from him. 70. ——— Suit for removal of encroachment—Fear of acquiescence.—A suit for the removal of an encroachment is maintainable without actual damage having occurred or the immediate prospect of damage, if it can be shown that some damage may arise from the encroachment hereafter, when, from the plaintiff's right to interfere for a series of years, the opposite party would possibly have acquired a right which would bar the plaintiff's remedy. 10. CASTE QUESTIONS.

71. ——— Suit for damages for withholding a customary present from a member of a caste—Omission from distribution of funeral presents.—The plaintiff complained that on the occasion of the distribution of certain funeral presents by the defendant's father, in which as a member of the caste the plaintiff was entitled to share, he had been omitted, and had received nothing. He sued the defendants to recover damages for the injury to his character and reputation caused by such omission. Held that there was no legal right in the plaintiff to the funeral presents, and the slight which the omission to give such presents to the plaintiff might imply was to be regarded as the result of a breach of social etiquette, with which the caste was exclusively competent to deal. 72. ——— Claim to be chalvadi of Lingayet caste—Intrusion in office—Office to which no fees are appurtenant.—Plaintiff was the hereditary holder of the office of chalvadi or bearer on public occasions of the insignia or symbols of the Lingayet caste at Bagalkot in the district of Belgaum; no fees as of right were appurtenant to that office, but voluntary gratuities might be given to the chalvadi. In an action brought by plaintiff against defendant as an intruder upon his (the plaintiff's) office,—Held that the plaintiff's claim to be chalvadi of the Lingayet caste at Bagalkot was a caste question within the meaning of the unrepealed portion of cl. 1, s. 21 of Bombay Regulation II of 1827. SHANKARA v. HANMA . I. L. R., 2 Bom., 470

73. ——— Custom—Caste usage—Expulsion of member of caste under mistake of fact and without notice.—In a suit relating to the management of the common property of the members of a Hindu caste, the plaintiff's right to sue was denied on the ground that, having violated the rules of the caste, he had been expelled from it. Held (1) that it was open to the Court to determine whether or not the alleged expulsion from caste was valid; (2) that if the plaintiff had not in fact violated the rules of the caste, but was expelled under the bond fide, but mistaken, belief that he had committed a caste offence, the expulsion was illegal and could not affect his rights. Per KERNAN, J.—A custom or usage of a caste to expel a member in his absence without notice given or opportunity of explanation offered is not a valid custom. KRISHNASAMI CHETTI v. 74. ——— Dispute as right to office of khatib—Mahomedan Law—Bom. Reg. II of 1827, s. 21.—S. 21 of Regulation II of 1827 has no application to suits between Mahomedans. A dispute as to the right to an office, such as the office of khatib (or preacher) is said to be among Mahomedans, is not a caste question within the meaning of the terms as used in the section; a suit will therefore lie to establish such a right. HASHIM SAHEB VALAD AHMED SAHEB v. 12. CHARITIES AND TRUSTS.

77. ——— Suit to recover trust property—Advocate General—Dedication of lands for charitable use—Illegal sale—Suit to set aside sale and recover trust property—Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, s. 539.—The plaintiff's grandfather dedicated certain lands in a village, of which he was the jaghirdar, to the expense of celebrating an annual fair in honour of a saint, and of lighting a lamp at his shrine. He reserved the paramount authority over, and management of, the said lands to his family, of which the plaintiff was the representative. The lands were sold illegally, as alleged by the plaintiff, to the defendant at an auction in execution of a decree obtained against one N, who with his predecessors had, as was alleged, been employed to worship at the shrine. The plaintiff accordingly sought to have the sale set aside, and to be put into possession of the lands. Held that the object of the suit being merely to recover the trust property from outsiders, did not fall within s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it could be proceeded with without making the Advocate General a party to it. LAKSHMANDAS v. 78. ——— Suit for declaration that property is wakf—Act XX of 1863, ss. 14, 15, 18—Civil Procedure Code, s. 539—Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act), s. 42.—A Mahomedan brought a suit against a person in possession of certain property for a declaration that the property was wakf. He did not allege himself to be interested in the property further or otherwise than as being a Mahomedan. He stated as his cause of action that the defendant had, in a former suit between the parties, filed a written statement in which he denied that the property now in question was wakf. Held that, unless it could be shown that the suit was maintainable under some statutory provision, it could not be maintained. Held also that inasmuch as no permission had been given to the plaintiff to bring the suit, it was not maintainable under Act XX of 1863 or under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held further that the suit was not maintainable under the provisions of s. 42 of Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act). Held therefore that the suit was not

79. ——— Suit to set aside alienation of wakf property made to a stranger—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 539.—When a suit is brought to set aside an alienation made to a stranger, such a suit by the worshipper at a mosque or temple can be maintained and does not fall within s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section is only applicable where there is an alleged breach of trust created for a public, charitable, or religious purpose, and the direction of the Court is necessary for the administration of the trust. As against strangers, s. 539 does not apply. HASSAN v. SAGUN BALKRISHNA I. L. R., 24 Bom., 170

84. ——— Suit by members of a caste and worshippers at caste temple against trustees of caste and temple property—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 30 and 539—Right to manage caste and temple funds—Public charity—Private charity—Parties—Trustees—Negligence—Wilful default—Acquiescence of majority of caste in unauthorized use of trust funds—Rights of minority.—In or about the year 1839 a temple to the god Shri Ananinathji was erected in Bombay by the Doola Oswal Bania caste, the religion of which caste is the Jain religion. A large portion of the funds required for building the temple was advanced by one N N, at that time the leading man in the caste; the rest was obtained from the caste by subscription. The firm of N N acted as the bankers to the caste and to the temple, received all the gifts and offerings made by the worshippers, and for many years administered all the affairs of the temple. The sums advanced by N N were gradually but entirely repaid to him out of the gifts and offerings. There were three separate funds, of which separate accounts were kept in the books,—viz., (1) the durasa fund, which was devoted to the temple purposes, such as maintenance of priests, repairs, etc., and gifts to poorer temples; (2) the sadaran fund, which was more extended in its objects, but still limited to religious and charitable purposes, such as payments to poor devotees irrespective of their caste, etc., and (3) the mahajan fund, which was devoted to caste purposes, such as purchase of caste utensils, etc. All three funds were collected at the temple. Gifts and offerings were made by all worshippers at the temple, whether members of the caste or not. Subscriptions were made only by members of the caste. All the regular subscriptions came from the caste exclusively, and the great bulk of the gifts and offerings came from the caste also. Only about Rs. 12,000 had been given by outsiders up to the date of the suit, while nearly six lakhs had been given by the caste. N N died in 1842, and his adopted son V became head of the firm, which continued to manage the funds of the temple under the name of V N & Co. V died in 1852, and H (defendant No. 1) succeeded him. The firm

meanwhile had invested the funds of the temple in eight lots of immoveable property. In 1867 the caste determined to appoint trustees of the temple property, and in September 1867 a trust-deed was executed whereby H, K, and G (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3), together with three others who were dead at the time of this suit,—viz., J R, T W, and M T,—were appointed trustees of all the immoveable property belonging to the temple. The deed set forth the objects to which the income of the property should be applied, and provided that the surplus should be invested in Government securities, in corporation shares or in landed property, but in no other shares of any description whatsoever. It also authorized the trustees to invest surplus moneys in the firm of V N & Co. It was admitted that, subsequently to June 1869, the trustees managed the temple, and not only the immoveable property, but all the funds. A debt of Rs. 24,000 was due from the firm of V N & Co. to the temple and caste when the trustees took over the management. In 1870 the firm of V N & Co. became insolvent, and in their schedule the trustees were entered as creditors in respect of darasa account, Rs. 157,649; on mahajan account, Rs. 68,017; on sadaran account, Rs. 22,597. It was admitted that the trustees knew of this entry in the said schedule. They, however, received no dividend, although other creditors, including K (defendant No. 2), were paid two annas in the rupee. This sum of Rs. 24,000 due to the temple was wholly lost. In April 1867, Rs. 15,000 of the temple funds were invested—it did not appear by whom—in the name of G (defendant No. 3), and in August 1868 a sum of Rs. 15,000 was advanced to one J P. In 1869 a sum of Rs. 10,000 was advanced by the trustees to N K & Co., which was never repaid, nor was any interest received upon it. It was lost on the failure of that firm in 1879. The principal partner of that firm (N K) was the only son of K (defendant No. 2), who also had an interest in it. In 1877-78 various loans were made by the trustees to three mills in which one or more of the trustees was interested. Of Rs. 55,000 lent to the mills and to N K & Co., Rs. 42,000 were lost. Half a lakh of outstanding gifts to the temple remained uncollected owing to the negligence of the trustees. Two suits brought by another caste against the trustees were defended out of the temple funds. All the defendants (trustees), with the exception of K, were in needy circumstances. In 1880 a hundred members of the caste protested against the management of caste and temple affairs by the defendants. The plaintiffs, six in number, took part in the protest, and filed the present suit in 1881. Thereupon there was a caste agitation in favour of the defendants, who were all shettias of the caste. A meeting of the caste was held, and a series of resolutions, supporting the defendant's management and approving of their conduct, was passed, and a document to that effect was signed by 1,468 persons—the whole caste in Bombay numbering only 1,500. The plaintiffs sought to make the defendants liable in respect of the moneys lost to the caste and temple funds, and prayed for the appointment of new trustees and for the settlement of a scheme. The defendants denied the charges of negligence, and pleaded that the suit was not properly constituted, not having been brought under s. 30 or 539 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877, and that it was in contravention of Regulation II of 1827, Ch. II, s. 21. They relied upon the fact that the caste had approved of their conduct and had allowed them to defend this suit at the expense of the caste. They contended that under these circumstances the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suit, and that the Court would not interfere with or control the decision of the majority of the caste in matters relating to the internal management of its affairs. Held that s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) did not apply. If the plaintiffs had any right of action, it was a complete right of action vested in each of them, and not a mere joint right shared with others and incomplete unless they united themselves with others. They sued as subscribers to the temple and devotees of the idol, and as such each had a right to complain of maladministration. They were entitled to sue in their own right and in their own name without permission of the Court or notice to other parties interested. Held also (following Thanga Karuppa v. Arumuga Nadan, I. L. R., 5 Mad., 383) that s. 539 of Act X of 1877 did not apply. The three funds administered by the defendants were different in character. The mahajan fund was a purely secular fund; the other two funds were religious and charitable funds. Even if the case came under the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539 would not apply, that section being permissive or directory, and not mandatory. Any person interested in the proper observance of a religious endowment may sue in his own name to have the trust properly administered. The section does not prohibit a private suit, and does not make the sanction of the Advocate General a condition precedent. The gifts to the temple comprised in the darasa and sadaran funds were irrevocably dedicated to a public charity, and therefore the approval by the caste of the conduct of the trustees was no bar to the suit. They were also dedicated to the idol, who was a public, not a mere private household, divinity. The ideal personality of such an idol is well recognized, and in case of misappropriation of the property he is entitled to the protection of the public authorities, on the ground that it has been devoted to public religious purposes, and must not be wasted even by the donors. The management of the temple belonged to the Dossa Oswal Bania caste, and not to the whole Jain community. Although the donations were irrevocably dedicated to public purposes, the donors had never lost the right, which was attached to the caste from the beginning, of managing the temple which they had founded, and their management could only be interfered with as a public charitable trust on proof of maladministration. On the evidence,—Held that the defendants were not liable for losses prior to 1867. It was not clearly proved that they were managers of the temple funds before that date. Held also that the defendants were liable for the losses incurred subsequently to 1867. They assumed the management on the execution of the trust-deed in that year, and ought to have taken steps to recover the moneys which had been improperly advanced on loan or otherwise negligently invested. Not having done so, they were guilty of wilful neglect, and were liable to refund the moneys which had been lost. The liability was, however, confined to the first three defendants, it not being proved that the remaining defendants had ever acted as trustees. The negligence of the trustees in not taking steps to recover the Rs. 240,000 due from the firm of V N & Co. was a clear breach of trust. The evidence showed that, although the whole sum could not have been recovered at any time during the trusteeship of the defendants, yet that some portion of the money might have been obtained if due diligence had been used, and that other creditors of the firm had actually been paid 2 annas in the rupee. The first three defendants were therefore liable to refund 2 annas in the rupee of such portion of the Rs. 240,000 as belonged to the darasa and sadaran funds. As to the malajan fund, it belonged to the caste, and the caste had condoned its misapplication, which it had power to do. The defendants were also held liable to refund such other sums as had come into their hands and had been lost in consequence of their negligence. The Court removed the defendants from the trusteeship, and ordered a scheme to be settled.

85. — Suit for possession of endowed property—Religious trust—Charitable trust—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIX of 1882), ss. 30, 539—Act XX of 1863.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession as mutwalli of certain parcels of land, alleging that they were dedicated as wakf, and that the profits were "applied to the feeding of wayfarers and travellers, to lighting the mosque and shrine in the evening, and to meeting the expenses of repeating prayers on the occasion of Id and Bakrid, and that the said profits were never spent for personal purposes." The plaintiff based her right to sue upon the fact that her deceased husband had been mutwalli, and she prayed that the property in suit might be declared wakf, and that certain alienations made by her step-son since her husband's death might be set aside. Held that the trust to which the suit related was one partly for charitable and partly for religious purposes. As far as it related to the former, it was governed by s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if viewed in the light of the latter, by Act XX of 1863; and that the suit, not being properly framed in compliance with the provisions of either of these enactments, was not maintainable. Held further that, even supposing the endowment alleged was neither a public charity within the meaning of s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code nor a religious endowment to which Act XX of 1863 applied, the plaintiff was not entitled to sue alone, as it was clear upon the face of the plaint that she was not alone interested in the subject-matter of the suit, and therefore that she could only sue on behalf of all who were so interested, having first obtained the leave of the Court and otherwise complied with the provisions of s. 20

86. — Suit in respect of religious endowment—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 30, 539—Beng. Reg. XIX of 1810—Act XX of 1863.—In a suit by two of the worshippers at a certain mosque, instituted after having obtained the sanction of the Advocate General under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, against the mutwalli of the mosque and two other persons to whom the mutwalli had mortgaged part of the endowed property to secure the repayment of a loan, it appeared that one of the mortgagees had sold some of the wakf property in execution of a decree which he had obtained upon his mortgage, and the property had been purchased by the other mortgagee. The plaintiffs prayed that the property purchased might be declared to be wakf; that the sale in execution might be declared to be invalid; that a mutwalli might be appointed by the Court; and that the costs of doing the acts of the wakf might be defrayed from the profits of the property belonging to the endowment. Held that, so far as regarded that portion of the prayer which fell within the provisions of s. 539 of the Code, the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue, as they were not "persons having a direct interest in the trust" within the meaning of the section and that the suit should have been instituted under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863 after sanction obtained under s. 18. Held also that, though the plaintiffs might possibly have obtained leave to sue under s. 30 of the Code on behalf of themselves and the other persons attending the mosque, they, not having obtained such leave, were not entitled to institute the suit for the purpose of obtaining the relief asked for in the other prayers of the plaint. JAN ALI v. 87. — Suit to restrain use of property for other than purposes of endowment—Injunction—Property dedicated to religious purposes.—The plaintiff's ancestor built a temple, a bathing-ghât, a room called "Gungajatri ghur," and a ghât close to it, to which persons on the point of death were removed, and certain ceremonies were performed. The defendants used the last-mentioned ghât for the purpose of landing goods. Held that if, when the plaintiff's ancestor erected the buildings, he intended to grant to the Hindu community merely a right of easement over the property, and not to transfer the ownership therein to the community, the plaintiff was entitled to maintain a suit to restrain defendants from using the ghât for trading purposes. JAGGAMONI DASI v. A trust for a Hindu idol and temple is to be regarded in India as one created "for public charitable purposes" within the meaning of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). 2. The Hindu law recognizes not only corporate bodies with rights of property vested in the corporation apart from its individual members, but also the judicial persons or subjects called foundations. A Hindu who wishes to establish a religious or charitable institution may, according to his law, express his purpose and endow it, and the ruler will give effect to the bounty, or at least protect it. A trust is not required for this purpose as it is by English law. 3. Those who take charge of gifts made to a religious or charitable institution—whether such gifts consist of cash, jewels, or land—incur thereby a responsibility for their due application to the purposes of the institution. They are answerable as trustees would be, even though they have not consciously accepted a trust, and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by suit open to any one interested as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio. The plaintiffs as relators filed this suit under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) against the defendants as trustees of the temple of Shri Ranchhod Raiji at Dakor. The plaintiffs were five in number. The first plaintiff was the hereditary manager of the temple and its appendant villages. The other plaintiffs were priests residing at Dakor, who ordinarily took charge of pilgrims visiting the shrine, and performed worship of the idol on their behalf. The defendants were the shevaks or ministers of the idol—about one hundred and fifty in number—who took office by hereditary descent. They remained in constant attendance on the idol, performed the daily services at the temple, collected all the offerings made at the shrine, and kept them in a bhandar or store-room. The god Shri Ranchhod Raiji was held in great veneration by the followers of the Vaishnava religion throughout Western India. Every full moon thousands of pilgrims resorted to the shrine, and made offerings to the deity, of cash, ornaments, clothes, and other articles amounting in value to about a lakh of rupees in the course of a year. Besides these offerings, the temple enjoyed a grant, in perpetuity, of the revenues of several inam villages, of which Dakor and Kangri yielded the largest income. The plaintiffs sued as persons interested in the maintenance of this public religious and charitable institution, and prayed that the Court would make the defendants, as recipients of the offerings at the idol's shrine, accountable as trustees, for the right disposal of the property thus acquired. The plaintiffs alleged that the income of the temple had largely increased, and had been wrongly appropriated by the defendants to their personal purposes. They therefore prayed for an account, for the appointment of a receiver, for the removal of the shevaks from their office, and for the settlement of a scheme of future management. The defendants answered (inter alia) that the plaintiffs had not such a direct interest in the institution as to entitle them to sue under s. 539 of Act X of 1877; that they themselves were owners of the idol and of the idol's property, and that as such they were not liable to render an account of the offerings they had collected at the shrine. They also contended that they were not liable to be removed from their offices, which they and their ancestors had held for several centuries past. The District Judge dismissed the suit, on the preliminary ground that, except the first plaintiff, who was a hereditary manager of the temple, the other plaintiffs had not such a direct interest in the charity as to entitle them to sue under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). Held, reversing the decision of the District Judge, that plaintiffs Nos. 2–5, as priests residing at Dakor and taking part in the worship of the idol, were directly interested in its due performance and its maintenance. Though they might not be trustees, they were clearly among those who in practice benefited by the execution of the trust. They had thus an undeniable locus standi as relators, and the suit could proceed at their

instance. Held further that the shevaks were not the owners of the offerings made to the idol. As recipients of the those offerings, they were responsible for their due application to the purposes of the foundation. They were liable as trustees to render an account of their management. The Court accordingly directed the District Judge (1) to take steps either by appointing a receiver, or otherwise, in his discretion, for guarding the property of the temple; (2) to take an account of the property and of the receipts and disbursements of the temple; (3) to make the requisite orders for recovering property appropriated by the shevaks; and (4) to draw up a scheme for the future management of the temple and its funds, regard being had to the established practice of the institution and to the position of the shevaks and of other persons connected with it. 92. ——— Suit by worshipper of Hindu temple relating to trust—Trust for public religious purposes—Private trust—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 30, 539—Act XX of 1863—Hindu Law.—The defendants made a gift of land to a Hindu temple for the purpose of defraying the expenses appertaining to the idol. The temple was built and the gift made in 1870. The defendants obtained from the revenue authorities mutation of names in the idol's favour and an acknowledgment of the person whom they nominated as agent or manager. The plaintiff, alleging that they had subsequently repossessed themselves of the land and the profits accruing therefrom, and that he was interested as a Hindu in worshipping at the temple, and professing to sue on behalf of the entire body of the worshippers thereat, sued for declaration that the land was wakf, and the idol entitled to hold it in his own name; that the defendants should be directed to apply the income of the property to the purposes of the temple, and that the Court should give such orders and instructions as might be necessary and proper for the future management of the temple and payment of income. No sanction to the institution of the suit was obtained under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held by the Full Bench that the gift made by the defendants constituted a trust for the purposes of the temple. Per EDGE, C.J., and TYRELL, J., that the defendants before the Court did not constitute themselves trustees in any sense. Held also by the Full Bench that the suit was not maintainable as against those defendants. Per

STRAIGHT, J., that the suit was not maintainable under the Hindu Law; that the trust was one for public religious purposes; that such a suit, in which the plaintiff asked to have the trust administered by the Court, could not be maintained without the sanction required by s. 539 of the Code; that assuming s. 539 to be inapplicable, and Act XX of 1863 to apply, the suit could not be maintained without the sanction required by that Act; and that, with reference to s. 30 of the Code, no cause of action had accrued to plaintiff alone on which he could maintain the suit. Per EDGE, C.J., and TYRELL, J., that if the trust were one for public religious purposes, the suit as against the defendants before the Court must fail for non-compliance with the provisions of s. 539 of the Code and, if for private or quasi-private religious purposes, it must also fail, since there was no principle on which the plaintiff, as one of the public worshipping in the temple, could maintain it against those defendants who were not trustees, but (if they had wrongfully taken possession) trespassers; that Act XX of 1863 could not apply; and that, with reference to s. 30 of the Code, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit alone on his own behalf, or on behalf of himself and others against those defendants. *Jawahra v. Public charity—Trust—Public charitable or religious trust—Offerings made to an idol—Liability of persons in possession of an idol's property—Account—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts in cases relating to public charities—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 539—"Direct interest," Meaning of.—1. A trust for a Hindu idol and temple is to be regarded in India as one created "for public charitable purposes" within the meaning of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). 2. The Hindu law recognizes not only corporate bodies with rights of property vested in the corporation apart from its individual members, but also the judicial persons or subjects called foundations. A Hindu who wishes to establish a religious or charitable institution may, according to his law, express his purpose and endow it, and the ruler will give effect to the bounty, or at least protect it. A trust is not required for this purpose as it is by English law. 3. Those who take charge of gifts made to a religious or charitable institution—whether such gifts consist of cash, jewels, or land—incur thereby a responsibility for their due application to the purposes of the institution. They are answerable as trustees would be, even though they have not consciously accepted a trust, and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by suit open to any one interested as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio. The plaintiffs as relators filed this suit under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) against the defendants as trustees of the temple of Shri Ranchhod Raiji at Dakor. The plaintiffs were five in number. The first plaintiff was the hereditary manager of the temple and its appendant villages. The other plaintiffs were priests residing at Dakor, who ordinarily took charge of pilgrims visiting the shrine, and performed worship of the idol on their behalf. The defendants were the shevaks or ministers of the idol—about one hundred and fifty in number—who took office by hereditary descent. They remained in constant attendance on the idol, performed the daily services at the temple, collected all the offerings made at the shrine, and kept them in a bhandar or store-room. The god Shri Ranchhod Raiji was held in great veneration by the followers of the Vaishnava religion throughout Western India. Every full moon thousands of pilgrims resorted to the shrine, and made offerings to the deity, of cash, ornaments, clothes, and other articles amounting in value to about a lakh of rupees in the course of a year. Besides these offerings, the temple enjoyed a grant, in perpetuity, of the revenues of several inam villages, of which Dakor and Kangri yielded the largest income. The plaintiffs sued as persons interested in the maintenance of this public religious and charitable institution, and prayed that the Court would make the defendants, as recipients of the offerings at the idol's shrine, accountable as trustees, for the right disposal of the property thus acquired. The plaintiffs alleged that the income of the temple had largely increased, and had been wrongly appropriated by the defendants to their personal purposes. They therefore prayed for an account, for the appointment of a receiver, for the removal of the shevaks from their office, and for the settlement of a scheme of future management. The defendants answered (inter alia) that the plaintiffs had not such a direct interest in the institution as to entitle them to sue under s. 539 of Act X of 1877; that they themselves were owners of the idol and of the idol's property, and that as such they were not liable to render an account of the offerings they had collected at the shrine. They also contended that they were not liable to be removed from their offices, which they and their ancestors had held for several centuries past. The District Judge dismissed the suit, on the preliminary ground that, except the first plaintiff, who was a hereditary manager of the temple, the other plaintiffs had not such a direct interest in the charity as to entitle them to sue under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). Held, reversing the decision of the District Judge, that plaintiffs Nos. 2–5, as priests residing at Dakor and taking part in the worship of the idol, were directly interested in its due performance and its maintenance. Though they might not be trustees, they were clearly among those who in practice benefited by the execution of the trust. They had thus an undeniable locus standi as relators, and the suit could proceed at their

instance. Held further that the shevaks were not the owners of the offerings made to the idol. As recipients of the those offerings, they were responsible for their due application to the purposes of the foundation. They were liable as trustees to render an account of their management. The Court accordingly directed the District Judge (1) to take steps either by appointing a receiver, or otherwise, in his discretion, for guarding the property of the temple; (2) to take an account of the property and of the receipts and disbursements of the temple; (3) to make the requisite orders for recovering property appropriated by the shevaks; and (4) to draw up a scheme for the future management of the temple and its funds, regard being had to the established practice of the institution and to the position of the shevaks and of other persons connected with it. 92. ——— Suit by worshipper of Hindu temple relating to trust—Trust for public religious purposes—Private trust—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 30, 539—Act XX of 1863—Hindu Law.—The defendants made a gift of land to a Hindu temple for the purpose of defraying the expenses appertaining to the idol. The temple was built and the gift made in 1873. The defendants obtained from the revenue authorities mutation of names in the idol's favour and an acknowledgment of the person whom they nominated as agent or manager. The plaintiff, alleging that they had subsequently repossessed themselves of the land and the profits accruing therefrom, and that he was interested as a Hindu in worshipping at the temple, and professing to sue on behalf of the entire body of the worshippers thereat, sued for declaration that the land was wakf, and the idol entitled to hold it in his own name; that the defendants should be directed to apply the income of the property to the purposes of the temple, and that the Court should give such orders and instructions as might be necessary and proper for the future management of the temple and payment of income. No sanction to the institution of the suit was obtained under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held by the Full Bench that the gift made by the defendants constituted a trust for the purposes of the temple. Per EDGE, C.J., and TYRELL, J., that the defendants before the Court did not constitute themselves trustees in any sense. Held also by the Full Bench that the suit was not maintainable as against those defendants. Per

STRAIGHT, J., that the suit was not maintainable under the Hindu Law; that the trust was one for public religious purposes; that such a suit, in which the plaintiff asked to have the trust administered by the Court, could not be maintained without the sanction required by s. 539 of the Code; that assuming s. 539 to be inapplicable, and Act XX of 1863 to apply, the suit could not be maintained without the sanction required by that Act; and that, with reference to s. 30 of the Code, no cause of action had accrued to plaintiff alone on which he could maintain the suit. Per EDGE, C.J., and TYRELL, J., that if the trust were one for public religious purposes, the suit as against the defendants before the Court must fail for non-compliance with the provisions of s. 539 of the Code and, if for private or quasi-private religious purposes, it must also fail, since there was no principle on which the plaintiff, as one of the public worshipping in the temple, could maintain it against those defendants who were not trustees, but (if they had wrongfully taken possession) trespassers; that Act XX of 1863 could not apply; and that, with reference to s. 30 of the Code, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit alone on his own behalf, or on behalf of himself and others against those defendants. *Jawahra v. Under that section, as originally enacted, the words were "having a direct interest in the trust," and the word "direct" has been taken out by Act VII of 1888. The inference is that the Legislature intended to allow persons having the same sort of interest that is sufficient under s. 14 of Act XX of 1868 to maintain a suit under s. 539. The Collector, in giving his consent to the institution of a suit under s. 539, has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see not only whether the persons suing are persons having an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the kind contemplated by the section and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust. But where the form of the permission showed that he had omitted to exercise his judgment in the matter of the interest of the plaintiffs in the trust, such omission was held to be a mere irregularity and within the scope of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. SAJEDUR RAJA CHOWDHURI v. Charitable endowments—Interest sufficient to support a suit relating to charity.—A Hindu, shortly before his death, directed his wife and mother to employ part of his property for the maintenance and upkeep of a charitable institution, being a choultry where Jajpa Brahmans and travellers were fed, and at the same time empowered his wife to make an adoption, declaring that the adopted son should have no interest in the property devoted to the charitable purpose. On his death, the widow and mother executed a document, relating to the property, to give effect to the wishes of the deceased for the benefit of Brahmans; and three years later the widow took in adoption a boy, whose father acquiesced in the deceased man's dispositions. The charitable trust having been neglected and the adoptive son having taken possession in his own right of the lands constituting the endowment, two Brahman residents in the neighbourhood who had obtained leave under s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, instituted a suit as representing the Brahman community at large to remove the widow from the office of trustee, to have the adopted son declared ineligible for that office and for the appointment of a new trustee. Held that the plaintiffs possessed sufficient interest in the charity to enable them to maintain the suit, and that they were entitled to the relief claimed by them. The decision of BEST and WHELE, JJ., in Subbaya v. Krishna, I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186, approved. The interest required to enable a person to sue under that section must be an existing one, and not a mere contingency; the mere possibility of an interest or the mere possibility of succession to the management of the properties concerning which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue. The right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment is an independent right wholly irrespective of the right of the other worshippers, and therefore non-compliance by a worshipper with the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not affect a suit for the removal of a trustee of Mahomedan endowment. Jan Ali v. the possession of certain of the yogakars or parishioners, who had been elected karkars or churchwardens, but whose election had since been superseded in favour of three other persons, who now sued to recover possession. The defendants were Syro-Chaldean Christians, and with the two persons above referred to were joined the Chor Episcopa, the Vicar appointed to the church by him, and four persons representing the other yogakars. The plaint was framed under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 539, and contained, besides a prayer for possession, prayers for declaration that the church, etc., was held on trust for worship according to the faith and discipline of the Church of Rome, and for injunctions against the defendants. The suit was tried by the District Judge in whose Court it was instituted, although the defendants pleaded to his jurisdiction on the ground that the Civil Procedure Code, s. 539, was inapplicable. He passed a decree for the plaintiffs, holding that the church, etc., was dedicated to the trust above stated, although it had been diverted from the purpose of that trust for a time. Held (1) that the suit not being one brought by beneficiaries against trustees, or for any of the purposes mentioned in the Civil Procedure Code, s. 539, that section had no application; (2) that although the suit should accordingly have been brought in the Subordinate Court, the District Judge had jurisdiction to try it; (3) that the decree was right, on its appearing that the church, etc., had been held on the above trust from 1599 to 1882 with a doubtful interruption for one year, although the original trust may have been different. AUGUSTINE v. The plaintiffs sued, as trustees of a temple, to recover certain trust property from defendants, who were alleged to be in wrongful possession. The defendants pleaded that they were owners of the property in dispute and applied the income thereof for the purposes of the temple; they disputed the plaintiffs' title to the management or possession of the same. The Subordinate Judge, who tried the case in the first instance, held that the defendants were trustees with respect to the property in their possession, and that the suit was one of the nature contemplated by s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He therefore returned the plaint for presentation to the District Judge. This order was confirmed on appeal. Held that the Subordinate

The plaintiffs also prayed for the appointment of new trustees, and for the settlement of a new scheme of management under the direction of the Court. The plaintiffs and defendant were the descendants of Shri Morya Gosavi, the original founder of the savasthan. Shri Morya Gosavi was a devotee of the deity Shri Mangal Murti. He dedicated a temple to the deity at the village of Chinchvad, and established an annachhatra and sadavart for feeding the poor and the destitute. He buried himself alive, and over his tomb a temple was built to perpetuate his memory. The Raja of Satara conferred on his descendants from time to time grants of lands, villages, and varshasans for the maintenance of the shrine and of the charities connected with it. Votaries of the god Shri Mangal Murti visited the shrine in large numbers, and took part in the annual festivals and celebrations held in honour of the founder of the savasthan. In course of time the Chinchvad savasthan became one of the most popular sacerdotal institutions of the Deccan. In 1744 the Peshwa made a tahanama (or award) by which he set apart one half of the savasthan property exclusively for religious and charitable purposes, and distributed the other half among the descendants of the founder, to provide for their temporal wants. Subsequently to the date of this award, fresh grants were made to the manager of the savasthan by the ruling authorities of the day. In 1774 and 1776 A.D. the new acquisitions were divided on the principle adopted in the Peshwa's award, one-half being reserved exclusively for the savasthan, the other half distributed among the heirs of the grantee. In 1874 the defendant 1 succeeded to the office of manager and trustee of the savasthan. Within a few years after entering upon his office, the defendant 1, in conjunction with his son defendant 2, incurred heavy debts, mortgaged several villages belonging to the savasthan, and dealt with the savasthan income as if it was his own absolute property. The plaintiffs filed the present suit with the consent of the Advocate General in 1883. The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the property in suit was not burdened with a public religious or charitable trust; that they were not trustees, but owners, of the savasthan; and that the plaintiffs had not such direct interest in the property as to entitle them to sue under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge, who tried the case, found that the savasthan was a public religious and charitable institution; that the defendants were trustees in charge of the savasthan property, and that they were guilty of such gross misconduct as to make them unfit to act as trustees in future. He therefore passed a decree, directing the defendants to be removed from their office as trustees, appointed a new trustee in their place, and framed a scheme for the future management of the savasthan. Held on the evidence that the management of the Chinchvad savasthan—consisting of the sacred shrines at the villages of Chinchvad, Moregav, Theur, and Sidhateks with their endowments—constituted a public religious and charitable trust within the contemplation of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held also that the plaintiffs, being worshippers and devotees of the god Shri Mangal Murti and being also descendants of the original founder of the endowment, had a direct interest in the trust, entitling them to sue under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held further that the defendants' assertion of their right to treat the trust property as their private estate and to apply the trust funds to their private purposes was sufficient to justify their removal from the trust. Held further, upon the construction of the Peshwa's tahanama (or award), that it was the intention of the governing power in 1744 A.D. that thenceforth the Chinchvad savasthan—consisting of the shrines at Chinchvad, Moregav, Theur, and Sidhatek—should constitute a public devasthan; and that in setting apart a moiety of the property for the savasthan, the object was to provide a fund

108. ———— Public charitable trust—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 539—Consent of Advocate General.—Two out of five trustees appointed by a will to administer a public charitable trust brought this suit against the remaining three trustees praying (i) that the first defendant might be ordered to account for a specific sum of money of which it was alleged he had committed a breach of trust; (ii) that the first defendant might be removed from the office of trustee, and some other person appointed in his stead; and (iii) for such other or further relief as the nature of the case might require. The consent in writing of the Advocate General to the institution of the suit under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) had not been obtained. Held that the suit was one which fell within the purview of s. 539, and consequently, in the absence of such consent, was not maintainable. TRIOUMDAS MULJI v. 110. ———— Suit to remove a mohunt—Civil Procedure Code, s. 539—Trust for "public religious purposes."—Two plaintiffs instituted a suit, on behalf of themselves and 42 other persons named in a schedule to the plaint, against a mohunt of an akhra, to have certain alienations of property belonging to the idol set aside and the mohunt removed on the ground that he was wasting the idol's property and setting up an adverse title to it, and to have another mohunt and trustee of the property appointed in his place. The plaintiffs alleged that they and the 42 others named in the schedule were in the habit of worshipping the idol or of contributing to the worship and expenses of it, but it was clearly established by the evidence that any Hindu who chose was at liberty to give puja or render service and worship, and that others than the plaintiffs and the 42 persons named in fact did so, and that the plaintiffs and the persons named were therefore not the only persons interested in the suit. The suit was one to which the provisions of s. 539 of the Code applied, the suit being one based on the existence of a trust for public religious purposes and upon a breach of that trust and for the appointment of a new trustee, and being such should have been dismissed, not having been brought in the District Court or with leave of the Collector. SAJEDUR RAJA v. 111. ———— Suit by trustee—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 80, 539—Public charity.—The trustee of a temple sued to recover, from the representatives of the trustees of a fund constituted for special purposes in connection with the temple worship, a sum of money misappropriated by him and to obtain the appointment in his place of himself or some other fit person. The plaintiff obtained leave to sue under Civil Procedure Code, s. 20, but no sanction had been obtained under s. 539. Held that the suit was maintainable. S. 539 was intended to apply only to persons who, before its enactment, had, or were believed to have, no right to take proceedings for the purposes mentioned in the section. NELLAITAPPA PILLAI v. 112. ———— Suit for a declaration that a certain piece of land is a grave-yard—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 539.—Held that a suit for a declaration that a certain piece of land was a grave yard dedicated to the use of such persons as had no grave-yards of their own, and asking the Court to appoint a mutawalli and settle a scheme for the management of the grave-yard, was not such a suit as fell within the purview of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Lakshmandas Parashram v. 113. ———— Suit for ejectment of a jeer of religious institution as being illegally appointed—Prayer for appointment of a new jeer—Elective office.—The jeer of a muth died in 1888, and the defendant assumed office as his successor. The plaintiffs, who were disciples of the muth, asserting in the plaint that the office of the jeer was elective, but without having held an election, brought a suit to eject the defendant and to have a new jeer elected or appointed by the Court and placed in possession of the properties of the institution. It was alleged both that the defendant had not been duly appointed to be jeer and also that he was disqualified

114. ——— Public religious and charitable trust—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539—Hindu temple, with a dhar-mashala and sadavart attached to it—Liability of constructive trustee—Suit to remove trustee—Limitation.—A Hindu built a temple in honour of the deity Shri Pandurang, to which were attached a dhar-mashala and a sadavart for feeding travellers and giving alms to the poor. For the maintenance of the temple and the charities connected with it, he dedicated certain property by a deed of gift, under which he constituted himself a trustee for life and appointed a panch to act as his successors in the trust. During his life-time he managed the temple as provided in the deed. On his death in 1867, the panch did not take charge, but his son (the defendant) assumed the management. The temple was open to the Hindu community. In 1894 the pujari of the temple and five other worshippers of the idol filed this suit, under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with the sanction of the Advocate General, for removing the defendant from the management of the temple on the ground of his misconduct and mismanagement of the trust property. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the property was not a public religious and charitable trust, that he was not a trustee, that the plaintiffs had no right to sue, and that the suit was time-barred. Held (1) that, having regard to the fact that a certain number of the public had always used the temple, that there was attached to it a dhar-mashala, and that the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadavart, the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public religious and charitable purposes; (2) that although the defendant was not appointed a trustee, yet by taking charge of the endowment and purporting to manage it as temple property he made himself a constructive trustee, and was liable, as such, to the beneficiaries; (3) that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (4) that the suit was not time-barred, as with every fresh breach of the constructive trust or whenever the direction of the Court was deemed necessary a fresh cause of action arose. JUGAL KISHORE v. 122. ——— Suit for a receipt for goods as being partnership goods—Suit for dissolution of partnership.—Plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract with a view to trade, by which each was to contribute a certain sum either in cash or goods. A trading concern was opened accordingly, but after a very short time the parties fell out. Defendant then obtained through the Magistrate the return of certain goods which, as he alleged, he had placed with the plaintiff independent of the partnership speculation. Plaintiff thereupon sued for a declaration that the goods were partnership goods and to obtain a receipt for them as such. Held that there was no cause of action, and a suit for a receipt did not lie. In the absence of books and accounts or any other evidence, the suit could not be converted into one for dissolution of partnership. ELIJAH v. ARATOON BROTHERS . 14 W. R., 47

123. ——— Suit on agreement to take over decrees—Subsequent compromise by payment of fixed sum.—Plaintiff took a patni from defendants, and as a part of the consideration of the lease agreed to be responsible for certain decrees outstanding at the time against the defendants. Thereupon was executed a second contract between the parties, by which that particular responsibility of paying the decrees was compromised and got rid of by plaintiff paying down a certain sum of money. Subsequently, the defendants successfully contested payment of one of the decrees, after which plaintiff sued to recover the money of which payment had been thus withheld. Held that, as the second contract had absolved plaintiff from all responsibility as regards the decrees, he was not entitled to recover the money claimed in the suit. SREENATH CHOWDREY v. 124. ——— Suit to set aside patni granted in breach of agreement.—Where the proprietors of a mehal had agreed with an ijaradar that in the event of their granting a patni to any body he should have the refusal, and, notwithstanding their agreement, gave a patni to another ijaradar,—Held that the latter, having been no party to the stipulation, was not bound thereby, and that a suit would not lie by the first ijaradar to set aside the patni granted to the second. KOMUL LOOHUN DASS v. Held, however, on review, that where A, taking a patni to the prejudice of B, had notice of an agreement existing between B and the zamindar, he could not in equity maintain the lease which he had obtained, but B would be entitled to relief against him; and the case was remanded to try if A took with notice of the agreement with B. DWARKANATH CHOWDREY v. 125. ——— Suit on agreement not to mortgage or sell except after offer to plaintiff—Right of pre-emption—Hypothecation, Suit to recover property after.—The plaintiff alleged that certain property was the hereditary property of himself and his brother N; that it had been determined by an award that if the plaintiff or N desired to mortgage or sell their respective shares they should, in the first instance, mortgage or sell to one another, and, if one party declined to take on mortgage or purchase, that the other should be at liberty to alienate elsewhere; that N had, however, executed a bond in favour of R, in which he had hypothecated the property and stipulated that the debt should only be recoverable from the property hypothecated; that N had confessed judgment in a suit brought against him by R on the bond, and had allowed a decree to be passed against the property; and that, as the bond had the effect of a deed of sale, and had been executed with an intent to defraud him, he sued to obtain possession of the property and a declaration of his title thereto as purchaser. The lower Courts decreed the plaintiff's claim. R, on special appeal, pleaded that the plaintiff had no cause of action, the property not having been sold. Held by PEARSON and SPANGLER, JJ., that the mere hypothecation of the property did not give the plaintiff a title to it as purchaser, and that the suit as brought must be dismissed. Held by STUART, C.J., that as the plaintiff stated matter sufficient to enable the Court to consider the validity of the claim made by the suit and on the facts and merits to do justice between the parties to the award, the objection to the form of the suit ought not to stand in the way of the plaintiff being decreed his rights under the award. PIBTHRE SINGH v. 126. ——— Suit to recover loan for Government revenue due from zamindari—Suit against zamindar for debt—Beng. Regs. of 1781 and 1787.—When money was borrowed to pay the revenue due from a zamindari, and paid to the Government on that account, the bond given by the vakils and managers of the zamindari to the trustee for the lenders in the English form, for the purpose of enabling them to enforce the personal engagements of the vakils and managers in the Supreme Court, was held not to deprive the lenders of their right, under the law prevailing among the natives in matters of contract, to sue the zamindar in the Courts of the mofussil. Held also that the laws of 1781 and 1787 were repealed by the laws of 1796 when this action was brought, and there was nothing in those two former Regulations which made it illegal for the zamindar to contract a debt, or for any other native to take an obligation from a zamindar without the consent of the officers of revenue; but that such an obligation, if founded on a valuable consideration, would be equally binding upon the conscience of the zamindar, and the demand and the payment would be equally legal as if such consent

Upon the same date A executed an ikrarnamah, in which he agreed that he would not collect the rents of the 2 annas transferred to him, that he would not ever demand partition of that share, and that he would not alienate or mortgage it or otherwise exercise proprietary rights over it. It was further provided that in the event of A committing any breach of covenant the sale should be avoided, and the proprietary rights in the 2 annas share should revert in M. A suit was subsequently brought by M upon the allegation that, in breach of the covenants of the ikrarnamah, A had collected the rents of the share; that, in consequence of his action in collecting the rents, the plaintiff had been compelled to sue the tenants; that in these suits the tenants exhibited receipts given by A, on the basis of which the suits were dismissed; and that he had been subjected to various costs and expenses. He therefore claimed by way of damages from A certain sums of money realized by A as rent from the tenants, and further, by reason of the ikrarnamah, to avoid the sale-deed which preceded it. Held that provisions of this kind, which absolutely debar the person to whom the proprietary rights have passed from exercising these rights, impose conditions which no Court ought to recognize or give effect to; that a covenant in a sale-deed the effect of which is to disable the vendee from either alienating or enjoying the interest conveyed to him is not only contrary to public policy, but in violation of the principle of ss. 10 and 11 of the Transfer of Property Act; and that therefore, as the agreement on the basis of which the plaintiff asked for relief was one which no Court should assist him in enforcing, the suit must fail. *Holman v. On the 28th February 1887 the plaintiff assigned this contract to one K, and a few days afterwards, viz., on the 7th March 1887, he became insolvent. In his schedule there was mention of this contract, or its assignment, or of the receipt of any consideration for the assignment. K, as the beneficial assignee of the contract, subsequently called on the defendant to give delivery of the goods, and offered payment of the price; but the defendant, who was then aware of the plaintiff's insolvency, refused, on the ground that K was not a bona fide assignee of the contract for value; and that the assignment was a sham, and was not intended to pass the beneficial interest in the contract. A suit was then brought against the defendant by K claiming damages for breach of the contract. This suit was dismissed, on the ground that the assignment of the contract was fraudulent. The plaintiff knew of the dismissal of K's suit in 1887, but had never himself made any demand on the defendant for the performance of the contract. On the 6th November 1889 the plaintiff's petition in insolvency was dismissed for non-prosecution, and on the 18th November 1889 K re-assigned the contract to the plaintiff. The plaintiff then sued the defendant to recover damages for breach of the contract. He contended that his assignment to K, though in fraud of the Official Assignee and the creditors of the insolvency, was not in fraud of the defendant, and that by the dismissal of his petition the parties, as to their rights and liabilities under the contract, had been relegated to the position which they occupied prior to the plaintiff's insolvency. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages from the defendant. There had been no demand for delivery by the plaintiff, or on his account, as required by s. 93 of the Contract Act. K had asked for delivery as beneficial owner, but the property had not passed to him by the assignment; and although the defendant would be bound to recognize an assignee who could establish his title of full ownership in the contract, he was under no obligation to recognize K when, as a fact, the beneficial interest in the contract still remained in the plaintiff, with whom the defendant had originally contracted. In England, where there has been an assignment by deed, the assigned property passes by force of the deed, and it cannot be impeached at law by the assignor or by third parties other than creditors, on the ground of its not being a real transaction; but where the assignment is not by deed, the true nature of it as a sham may be proved. In India it is in all cases open to third parties to show that such was the case. MULJI GOVINDJI v. NATHUBHAI HIRACHAND. I. L. R., 15 Bom., 1

The defendant contended that the contracts in question were not assignable without his consent, which had never been asked for nor given, and that the plaintiffs could not therefore maintain the action. Held that the objection was a good one. An assignment of a contract 'as distinguished from a debt or other chose in action', to be effectual, must amount to a novation, and requires the assent of the other party to the contract (s. 62, Contract Act, IX of 1872). 134. ——— Compromise of decree, Effect of—Mode of enforcing agreement of compromise—Reciprocal promises—Form of decree—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 51.—A decree for partition having been compromised by an agreement made by the parties, and communicated to the Court which passed the decree,—Held that the effect of the decree was extinguished by the agreement, which could only be enforced by a fresh suit, and not by an application for execution of the former decree. An agreement, consisting of reciprocal promises to be performed by the plaintiffs and the defendant, can be sued upon by the plaintiffs when they have not refused to carry out their promises, though they may not have put an allegation in the plaint saying that they are ready and willing to do so, s. 50 of the Indian Contract Act being no bar to such a suit. When the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for the performance of the part of the contract in which they are interested, and the defendant claims execution of the whole, to which the plaintiffs do not object, the Court ought to pass a decree directing execution of the whole contract, instead of rejecting the claim. *HARI RAGHUNATH JOSHI v. The mortgage was registered. Subsequently G and A joined in a license to the second and third defendants to cut and take wood in the forest, which the latter accordingly did. The plaintiff sued G and the other two defendants to recover, as damages, the value of the wood removed, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from removing more wood. Held that the claim would not lie, neither for the whole of the damages claimed nor for such part of them as

was equivalent to G's interest in the value of the wood removed,—the only remedy open to the plaintiff being a suit against A, his co-tenant, for an account. Though G, being out of possession to the knowledge of the licensees, could convey to them no right, yet A could; and a license from A gave a right to cut wood in the whole of the forest, since a co-tenant may lawfully enjoy the whole property in any way not destructive of its substance so as to amount to an ouster of the other co-tenants, and whatever a co-tenant may do himself he may license another to do. The licensees therefore did no wrong in acting on their license, and no suit lay against them; nor did G's joining in the license do the plaintiff any distinct injury for which an action for damages would lie against him. Quære—Whether plaintiff might not, however, have a right of action against G to recover any sum which G had obtained by assuming falsely a position and rights belonging to the plaintiff. *BALVANTRAY OZE v. The decree-holder then brought a suit against the objector, claiming a declaration of his right to recover the amount due under his decree by enforcement of lien against the house, and that the order releasing the property from attachment should be set aside, and also to recover the costs incurred by him in the execution department on the defendant's objection. Held also that, inasmuch as where a Court, having jurisdiction, orders or refuses costs, a separate action for such costs cannot be brought, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover from the defendant the costs incurred by him in the execution department. *Mahram Das v. 18. CUSTOMARY RIGHTS.

146. ——— Suit to restrain the use for taxis of land used for the purposes of the Holi—Easement—Cause of action.—A, a Mahomedan, purchased a house adjacent to a piece of waste land, on which after such purchase he caused a tasia to be erected at the time of the Mohurram. J and others, Hindus, instituted a suit against A, alleging in their plaint that for a long time previously they had been in the habit of going upon the land at the time of the Holi festival for the purpose of burning the Holi and celebrating the ceremonies incident thereto, and praying that the defendant "be restrained from improper interference, and that the plaintiffs be put in possession, by maintaining observance of the Holi rights, according to the ancient usage, on the land." It was found that the plaintiffs had, for a period of twenty years prior to the institution of the suit, exercised the right of going on to the land at the time of the Holi festival, without interruption or interference. It was also proved that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant had any proprietary right in the land, and that it belonged to the zamindars of the kaaba, who did not appear to object to its use by the defendant and other Mahomedans at the time of the Mohurram, for the erection of taxis. Held that the plaintiffs' claim appeared to be a claim to a right by custom of the nature described in Mounsey v. Ismay, 4 L. J. Ex., 52, and Abbot v. Weekly, 1 Lev., 176, and could not strictly be regarded as for an easement, the right not being set up in respect of any dominant tenement to which it was appurtenant over a servient tenement subject to it. Held further that, inasmuch as the nature of the right claimed was to come on the land for a few days at one period of the year, it by no means followed that the plaintiffs were entitled to object to the defendant's use of the land at another period; and that, looking to the extent and nature of the said right and to the form in which the plaint was shaped, the laying of a tasia upon the land at the Mohurram could not be held to be any interference with such right sufficient to afford a cause of action on which to come into Court. *ASHRAF ALI v. 150. ——— Suit for right to use ghat for religious purpose—Abstract right—Cause of action—Costs.—A Hindu brought a suit in which he alleged that the Hindu community had acquired by long-established custom an exclusive right to use for religious purposes a ghat situate on the River Ganges, but that the Mahomedans were in the habit of interfering with the exercise of such right by bathing at the ghat. He prayed for a declaration of the right, and for a perpetual injunction to be issued to the Mahomedans generally forbidding them to resort to the ghat. No act of trespass was charged against any of the defendants. The defence was that the Mahomedans were entitled to use the place, and that their use of it did not cause any inconvenience to the plaintiff. Held that the suit was not maintainable, since the Court had no power to pass a decree against persons who had never interfered with the property in dispute, or to issue an injunction against the whole Mahomedan world: but that, inasmuch as the defendants had fought the case all along as if the suit were maintainable and upon a false issue, both sides must pay their own costs. *SHAH MUHAMMAD v. The plaintiff proved by the evidence of the defendant himself that he was in possession of immoveable property of the deceased out of which the decree could be satisfied. The plaintiff prayed that the defendant, as executor, might be ordered to pay the amount with interest and costs, and if he should deny assets, then for administration of the estate of the deceased. The defendant did not enter appearance. Bombay. The execution of the decree in such suits is rigorously confined to immoveable estate. The ground of the interference of the High Court in such cases is that practically the judgment-creditor could not recover his debt except by process against the immoveable estate of the debtor. entitled to certain mans, consisting of the right to be the first to worship the deity on certain occasions, and to receive gifts of rice, cocoanut, and vida and vension made by the priest on certain religious ceremonies and other occasions. The plaintiff, being obstructed by the defendants in the enjoyment of the mans, sought to obtain a perpetual injunction against the defendants. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's claim as being one for mere dignities unaccompanied with emoluments, and as such not cognizable by a Civil Court. The plaintiff thereupon appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reserved the lower Court's decree, and granted a perpetual injunction against the defendants, prohibiting them from interference with the plaintiff's enjoyment. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court,—Held, restoring the decree of the Court of first instance, that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable. The mans were mere dignities to which no profits or emoluments were attached. The trifling gifts made by the priest, of rice, a cocoanut, and vida, on the occasion of worshipping the deity, and of a piece of vension on other occasions, could not be regarded as emoluments, being merely symbols of recognition and marks of respect of and to the holders of the mans. *Rama v. 24. EASEMENTS.

191. — Obstruction—Acquiescence—Suit for removal of obstruction—Decree for plaintiff qualified by declaring that parties retain rights exercised prior to obstruction.—In a suit for the removal of a building which the defendants had erected and which was an obstruction to the plaintiffs' right to use a courtyard adjoining their residences, it appeared that the land on which the building stood did not belong to either party, but that all the inhabitants of the mohulla had from time immemorial exercised a right of way over it to and from their houses. It also appeared that on a part of the same land there had formerly stood a thatched building used as a "sitting place" by the residents of the mohulla. Held that the right which was alleged to have been obstructed was not a public right of way, but a right which was confined to the people dwelling in the mohulla and going to and from the houses in the mohulla; and that the suit, being brought in respect of an interference with a private easement, was maintainable without proof of special damage. *Karim Baksh v. 193. ——— Suit by a dharmakarta disaffirming the acts of his predecessor—Act XX of 1863, s. 7—Mad. Reg. VII of 1817, s. 12—Suit to set aside lease granted by former dharmakarta of temple—Limitation—Cause of action.—The plaintiff, who had been appointed in 1886 by the Sub-Collector to be dharmakarta of a Hindu temple, for which no committee had been appointed under the Religious Endowments Act, s. 7, sued in 1886 to recover possession of land demised to the defendant on a perpetual lease in or about 1856 by a previous dharmakarta, who died in 1885. Held that, Madras Regulation VII of 1817 having been repealed as regards Hindu temples by Act XX of 1863, the appointment by the Sub-Collector gave the plaintiff no right to sue: accordingly, it was necessary to determine the question whether he had such right apart from that appointment. Held that, assuming he had such right, the plaintiff, since he did not derive title through his predecessor in office (the grantor of the lease), would be entitled to disaffirm his acts and could maintain the suit. The cause of action arose, and the period of limitation would therefore run not from the date of the lease, but from the date of the accession of the plaintiff to his office. MAHOMED v. GANAPATI . The defendant had been in possession of the land for more than twelve years, falsely asserting the title of kanomdar with the permission of the plaintiff's predecessor in office. Held (1) the suit was not barred by limitation; (2) the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit for the purpose of recovering for the trusts of the devasom property improperly alienated by his predecessor. *Suppammal v. 197. ——— Alienation of wakf property—Suit to set aside such alienation—Mahomedan Law—Wakf—Mutawali—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539.—Plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been granted in wakf to their ancestor and his lineal descendants to defray the expenses for, or connected with, the services of a certain mosque; that their father (defendant No. 8) and cousins (defendants Nos. 4 and 5), who were mutawallis in charge of the said property, had illegally alienated some of these lands, and had also ceased to render any service to the mosque, whereupon they (the plaintiffs) had been acting as mutawallis in their stead. They therefore claimed to be entitled, as such, to the management and enjoyment of the lands in dispute. It was contended (inter alia) that the plaintiffs could not sue in the lifetime of their father (defendant No. 8), he not having transferred his rights to them. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue to have the alienation made by their father and cousins set aside and the wakf property restored to the service of the mosque. They were not merely beneficiaries, but members of the family of the mutwali, and were the persons on whom, on the death of the existing mutwali, the office of mutwali would fall by descent, if, indeed, it had not already fallen upon them, as alleged in the plaint, by abandonment and resignation. Wakf property cannot be alienated, and any person interested in the endowment can sue to have alienations set aside and the property restored to the trust. Per RANADE, J.—As a suit for possession, the suit was defective in form, and could not be maintained. It was a suit for partition of a moiety of the lands, and the owner of the other moiety was not a party. The suit was, however, really a suit for a declaration that the lands were the inam property of the mosque, and, as such, was not liable to alienation for the private debts of defendants Nos. 3, 4, and 5. The plaintiffs were entitled to sue for such a declaration, although they could not obtain actual possession. They were beneficiaries and had a right to sue under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). When a suit is brought to set aside an alienation made to a stranger, such a suit by the worshipper at a mosque or temple can be maintained, and does not fall within s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). That section is only applicable where there is an alleged breach of trust created for a public, charitable, or religious purpose, and the direction of the Court is necessary for the administration of the trust. As against strangers, s. 539 does not apply. HASSAN v. SAGUN BALKRISHNA

27. EXECUTION OF DECREE.

199. — Suit after adverse order in execution—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 283.—S. 283 of Act X of 1877 enables a party against whom an order has been made in execution proceedings to bring a suit to establish his rights, whatever they may be, but it says nothing as to the nature of the suit or the Court in which it is to be brought. Whether the party is to sue in the Civil Court or in the Small Cause Court depends entirely upon the nature of the claim and the right which is sought to be enforced. A person whose goods are illegally sold under an execution does not lose his right to them, though he may have claimed them unsuccessfully in the execution proceedings. He may follow them into the hands of the purchaser, or of any other person, and may sue for them or their value without reference to anything which has taken place in the execution proceedings. SHIBOO NARAIN SINGH v. the objector claimed to the property, within the meaning of s. 283 of Act X of 1877. Held therefore where a person objected to the attachment of certain moveable property attached in execution of a decree, claiming it as his own, and his objection was struck off for default of prosecution, that such person might sue for damages for the wrongful attachment of such property without suing to establish the right which he claimed thereto. KALLU MAL v. 201. — Objection to attachment by judgment-debtor on behalf of others—Order against decree-holder—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283.—Where a judgment-debtor claims property which is the subject-matter of attachment, either on his own account as his own property, under whatever right, or as the representative of third parties, in which capacity he has been sued, the question between him and the attaching creditor is properly one between the parties to the suit under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But where the judgment-debtor raises the claim or objection on behalf of third parties who are not represented before the Court, the order passed thereon must be regarded as an order under s. 280 of the Code, and the only mode in which that order can be contested is in a regular suit as provided by s. 283. In execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor in his private capacity, the judgment-creditor attached certain property. Thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that the property attached had been dedicated by him some time previously as wakf under a registered wakfnamah, and that he was only in possession as mutwali under the deed. The lower Court found that the document created a valid wakf, and allowed the objection and released the property from attachment. The judgment-creditor appealed. At the hearing of the appeal it was contended that no appeal lay, inasmuch as the order was one under s. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code. On behalf of the judgment-creditor it was contended that the order was one under s. 244, and was thus appealable. Held that the order was one under s. 280, and that no appeal lay, the remedy of the judgment-creditor being by way of a regular suit as provided by s. 283. ROOP LALL DASS v. On 17th June 1871 M and T obtained a money-decree against B. On 9th March 1872 the defendants bought from B his equity of redemption. In July 1872 M and T attached the land in execution of their decree. The defendants objected to the attachment under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), but on investigation of their claim an order was made disallowing their claim on the 23rd December 1872. In June 1873 the defendants paid off the mortgage-debt and were put into possession by the mortgagee. In October 1878 M and T put up the land for sale in execution of their decree, and the plaintiff became the purchaser. On seeking to obtain possession, the plaintiff was resisted by the defendants, whose claim was allowed by the Subordinate Judge after inquiry. The plaintiff therefore brought this suit under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The lower Courts rejected his claim. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that, where, under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) or the corresponding sections (278 to 283) of the Civil Procedure Codes of 1877 and 1882, an order has been passed against any person making a claim to property under attachment, such person may bring a suit to establish his title to the property within one year from the date of such order; but in default of his bringing such suit within the prescribed time, he is precluded from asserting his title against the auction-purchaser, whether as plaintiff or defendant. In the present case an order had been passed against the defendants under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859, on the 23rd December 1872; and as they had brought no suit within a year from that date, they could not now contest the plaintiff's title to the property. The defendants, however, having, since date of the said order, paid off the mortgage,—Held that it would be contrary to justice, equity, and good conscience for the Court to assist the plaintiff in obtaining possession unless he paid the defendants the amount paid by them to the mortgagee to free the property from the incumbrance. NILO PANDU-BANG v. Before he obtained possession, Government revenue on the whole estate fell due. K C failed to pay his share, and his co-sharer K, to save the estate, mortgaged her share of the estate to one H B and with the amount so borrowed paid the whole sum due, and subsequently sued K C for the amount, eventually obtaining a decree. Subsequently this decree became vested in one R, and the pergunnah Alumpore came into the possession of one K G, who in 1874 took an assignment of the mortgage executed by K in favour of H B. The plaintiffs also alleged that since the execution proceedings had commenced they had discovered a secret arrangement made in 1877 between K G, R, and H B, by which it was agreed that R should not execute the decree against Alumpore, but would release K G from all liability in respect of the charge on that property, and in consideration K G executed a patni lease to H B of a portion of Alumpore at a small rent. R obtained an order for execution against the property of K C, and, having transferred his decree to the High Court, proceeded to enforce the decree against the plaintiff, the widow of K C, and her son by attaching the family dwelling-house in Calcutta. The widow and son then brought this suit against K G, R, and H B to have the share of K C in Alumpore ascertained, and praying for a decree calling upon K G to pay the amount of the value of the share of Alumpore in satisfaction of R's decree. Held that the suit could not be maintained so far as it attempted to make the decree a charge against Alumpore. Held on appeal that the suit was rightly dismissed; that, as far as R was concerned, it had already been decided that R was entitled, if he so chose, to execute his decree against the Calcutta property; and that therefore that question was res judicata; and that, as regards the plaintiff's claim that the patni given by K G to H B should be treated as part-payment to R, such a question could only be decided in execution proceedings; that the mere existence of the agreement between K G, R, and H B did not entitle the plaintiff to join them as co-defendants in the suit; and that, as far as K G was concerned, the suit brought against him could only be treated as a suit to establish a charge or lien on land out of Calcutta, and therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to try it. KRISTO MOHIN DASS v. 209. — Execution against a person not the legal representative—Deceased judgment-debtor.—The defendants, along with Nand C, had brought a suit against one A in the Civil Court at Peshawar in the Punjab, and obtained a decree on the 23rd July 1873 for Rs. 745-12. In 1881 application for transfer of the decree to the Court at Moradabad for execution was made, and it was granted, but no steps were taken thereupon. On the 12th June 1883 A died. On the 30th April 1884 the defendants again applied to the Court at Peshawar treating their judgment-debtor as being then alive for a fresh certificate to execute their decree in the Moradabad district, and obtained it. On the 20th of August 1885 they made an application to the District Judge of Moradabad for execution of their decree, and in it it was stated that the application was "for execution against A, and after his death against A L, the own brother, and D K, widow, and L P and others sons of A, residents of Kundarki, and the said A L, at present residing at Umbala and employed in the Commissariat Transport Department, judgment-debtors." It was further stated that "the judgment-debtor is dead, and his heirs are living and in possession of his estate, and A L himself has realised Rs. 637-4-9 due to the deceased judgment-debtor from the Commissariat Department of Calcutta and appropriated the same, therefore to that extent the person of the said A L is liable." Notification of this application was issued to A L, as also to the other persons named therein. A L objected to the application as against himself, stating that, although he was the brother of A, deceased, yet he always lived separate and carried on business separately; and that there was no connection or partnership between him and the deceased judgment-debtor, and that he had no property of the deceased in his possession. Further that, as A left issue, it was wrong to call him heir to A, and take out execution-process against him. In reply to these objections, the judgment-creditors (defendants) did not contend that A L was the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, but treated him as a person in possession of a sum of money belonging to the deceased, and therefore liable to the extent of the sum so received by him. The Subordinate Judge, holding that A L was the brother of the deceased and had realized the amount from the Commissariat Office, which he failed to prove that he paid to the deceased, ordered execution to proceed against him. A L then instituted this suit to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge. It was contended, first, that the suit was in effect a suit under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore barred as not having been brought within a year from the order of the Subordinate Judge; and, secondly, that the proceedings of the Subordinate Judge were held under s. 244 of the Code, and therefore no separate suit would lie. Held that the first contention must fail, inasmuch as an essential condition precedent to a suit under s. 283 of the Code is the making of an attachment of some property; of objection being taken to such attachment; of investigation being made into such objection; and lastly, of its being allowed or disallowed, and these did not exist in this case. The second contention also must fail, as the Subordinate Judge never treated the proceedings in execution against A L upon the footing that he was the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. Mahomed Aga Ali Khan v. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as not maintainable. Held that such a suit was maintainable, and that ss. 13 and 214 of the Civil Procedure Code were no bar thereto. But it is not the law that because a person against whom a decree has been passed alleges that it is wrong, and that it was obtained by perjury committed by or at the instance of the other side (which is fraud of the worst description) that he can obtain a rehearing of the questions in dispute in a fresh suit, by merely changing the form in which he places it before the Court, and alleging in his plaint that the first decree was obtained by the perjury of the person in whose favour it was given. In this case a suit brought in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to set aside a decree of the Court of Small Causes at Rangoon on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud was held under the circumstances of the case to be not maintainable. *MAHOMED GOLAB v. 214. ——— Suit to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud, challenging the decree in execution of which the sale took place as fraudulent, although the said decree was set aside on the ground of non-service of summons—Sale in execution of ex-parte decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 108 and 244.—An ex-parte decree for rent was obtained against A and others, and in execution of that decree certain lands of the judgment-debtors were sold and were purchased by a third party. Subsequently, at the instance of A, the said ex-parte decree was set aside on the ground of non-service of summons, and the original suit was restored, but that was dismissed for default, as the then plaintiff did not proceed with it. An application was then made by A to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud which was rejected, because the auction-purchaser was not made a party to the proceedings. A then brought a suit for declaration of title to a portion of the land sold and for confirmation of possession, challenging not only the sale, but also the decree, on the ground of fraud. The defence mainly was that, regard being had to the provisions of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, the suit was not maintainable. Held that, although there was no decree to be actually set aside, the plaintiff was entitled to show that the decree under which the sale was held was obtained by fraud as against him, and that therefore the suit was maintainable. *Abdul Mazumdar v. In the case of Lalit Coomarr Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty, 10 C. L. R., 258, it was not intended to hold that, under no circumstances would such a suit lie, but that, so long as the means provided by s. 318 of the Civil Procedure Code are open to a purchaser, he is bound to have recourse to that section rather than to bring a fresh suit. ISWAR PERSHAD GURGO v. 217. ———— Suit to obtain possession of land sold in execution of a decree—Possession, Application for, by auction-purchaser—Execution proceedings—Subsequent suit for possession of land sold in execution of decree.—In execution of a decree certain land belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold; subsequently the auction-purchaser, who had not got possession, re-sold the land to a third party and gave him the certificate. The latter then applied to the Court to be put into possession, but having failed in those proceedings, owing to some irregularity in the description of the boundaries of the property, he instituted a regular suit against the judgment-debtor to obtain possession. On a plea that such suit would not lie, as the plaintiff could have got possession in the miscellaneous proceedings,—Held that, having regard to the provisions of art. 138 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 and of s. 11 of Act XIV of 1882, such suit was maintainable. SEVU MOHUN BANIA v. BHAGOBAN DIN PANDEY

218. ———— Obstruction to execution of decree—Merger of cause of action—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 328.—S A, R, and S B were members of an undivided Hindu family. S B died, leaving him surviving several sons. Subsequently S, R, and M, the eldest son of S B, mortgaged the family house to the plaintiff. In 1877 the plaintiff brought a suit on the mortgage against S, R, and M, and obtained a decree for possession of the house until payment of the mortgage-debt. In execution of this decree, he was obstructed by the widow and B and L, other sons of S B, but the Court on 14th January 1879 overruled their objections and directed possession to be given to the plaintiff. On 28th January 1879 the plaintiff complained that he was prevented from obtaining possession of one of the rooms in the house; B appeared and admitted that he had locked up the room and he refused to give up possession, contending that he was not bound by the mortgage, as he was not at the time joint with M and the other sons of S B, and that the loan was not one required for family necessity. The plaintiff's application was dismissed. In 1882 the plaintiff brought a suit against B, in which he prayed for a decree giving him possession of the room on the terms of the decree in 1877. By the defendant it was (inter alia) contended that the previous suit on the mortgage had exhausted the plaintiff's cause of action, and that the plaintiff had no further right against the defendant. Held that the decree in the former suit could not affect the defendant, as he was not a party to it, nor was he represented. If he had been represented, he could not have resisted the execution of the decree. Not having been represented, he could on principle be exempted from liability in the present suit only if the cause of action was merged in the judgment against his uncles and brother. Here, however, there was no such merger. The previous decree had awarded possession of the whole house to the plaintiff. The existence of that decree could not be a reason for not awarding part of the same house when detained by the defendant. He avowed himself a stranger to the defendants against whom the previous decree was obtained, and his act might be regarded as constituting a separate cause of action. Held also that s. 328 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, does not make it obligatory on a decree-holder, who is obstructed in execution of the decree, to pursue his remedy under that section. Accordingly the omission of the plaintiff to avail himself of the remedy under that section did not prevent him from proceeding against the defendant by a regular suit. BALVANT SANTARAM v. BABAJI BIN SAMBHARA I. L. R., 8 Bom., 602

219. ———— Civil Procedure Code, ss. 318, 335—Suit to recover possession of property sold in execution of decree.—S attached certain land and a house in execution of a decree against R. M put in a claim under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure, alleging that he was in possession as purchaser from R. The claim was rejected. No suit was brought by M to contest this order. S purchased the said land and house in execution, and obtained a sale certificate. In 1884 S sued M to recover possession of the land and house, alleging that in execution-proceedings in 1882 he had been put into possession of the land, but not of the house, which was found locked up by the Court amin, and that M prevented him from enjoying both the land and house. M pleaded that S had never been put into possession, and again set up his title as purchaser from R and possession under such title. The Munsif found that S had been put into formal or constructive possession of the land, but not of the house, and decreed the claim. On appeal the District Judge held that S was bound to proceed according to the provisions of s. 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure to recover possession, and could not bring a separate suit. Held that, whether there had been legal delivery or not, the suit was not barred. SEVU v. 222. ——— Suit for damages on account of omission to offer food to idol—Cause of action.—The plaintiff, alleging that he was a member of a family of Gurus holding a vatan attached to a temple, complained that the defendant was the holder of an inam allowance, granted in consideration of his daily offering to the idol some rice and cake, and burning a lamp; and that he had omitted to make such offering for one year. The plaintiff claimed Rs 5 damages. Held that the plaintiff had no cause of action. The defendant's obligation, if any, was towards the idol; and, if that obligation had not been performed, it could only be enforced by some person claiming to have a right to insist that the worship of the idol should be properly performed. DHADPHALE v. 223. ——— Suit to establish right to remove idol for turn of worship.—When a plaintiff and defendant are jointly entitled to the profits from an idol in the defendant's temple, and the plaintiff is obstructed by the defendant in the use and worship of the idol, a suit will lie for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to have the idol removed to his own house during the period he is entitled to the profits of it. DWARKANATH ROY v. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for damages, it appeared that it was not reasonably practicable for the defendants to defend their lands from inundation by any means other than those adopted which would not have caused damage to the plaintiff. Held that no actionable wrong had been committed by the defendants, and that the suit was consequently not maintainable. *GOPAL REDDI v. 36. INSOLVENCY.

234. ——— Right of insolvent or his assignee to sue—After-acquired property—Official Assignee—Parties.—One B became possessed of certain properties in 1872 and 1881. In 1866 B had presented a petition in insolvency, and a vesting order had been duly made. No final order of discharge was ever made, and B died in 1888. The plaintiffs sued, as the heirs of B, for their share in the said properties. It was objected (i) that, looking to the insolvency of B, the plaintiffs had no interest in his estate; and (ii) that the Official Assignee, as the assignee of the estate and effects of B, was a necessary party to this suit. Held that the properties in question, coming to B after his insolvency, vested in him subject only to the right and claim of the Official Assignee, should he think fit to assert it, and that the plaintiffs, as representatives of B, could maintain the action, Held also that the Official Assignee was not a necessary party to the suit, though, in case of a decree in plaintiff's favour, notice thereof should be given to him by the Court. *FATIMABIBI v. The point taken in special appeal was that, the defendant not being a party on the record of those proceedings, the plaintiffs could not recover in this form of action. Held that, though the proper and more prudent course would have been to sue the defendant for damages, yet, this being a mere matter of form, the Court refused to interfere with the decision of the Courts below. *KHELARAM DOSS MISTREE v. 238. ——— Suit by one executor de son tort against another.—Letters of administration—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 190 and 266—Administration suit.—D, a Parsi, died intestate in 1877, leaving him surviving a widow, three daughters, and two sons, A and F. On D's death, his sons, without taking out administration, assumed the management of the estate, and each received sums of money on account of it. The widow and daughters of the deceased obtained letters of administration, but limited to the extent of their interests in the estate. In 1888 A brought a suit against his brother F and the other members of the family to recover out of the estate a certain sum of money advanced by him to D. Held that, the estate being unrepresented, the suit could not be maintained (s. 190 of Act X of 1865). The letters of administration issued to the widow and daughters of the deceased, being limited only to the extent of their shares in the estate, were not letters of administration such as are meant by s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). Held also that the only course open to the plaintiff was to take proceedings for the appointment of an administrator of the estate who would either administer it by the payment of the debts and the distribution of the surplus (if any) amongst the heirs, after taking an account of all property already received out of it by the creditors or heirs, or who could be compelled to do so by an administration suit. *FRAMJI DORABJI GHASWALA v. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes considered that the subject-matter of the plaint did not constitute a cause of action to the plaintiff, and dismissed the plaint, subject to the opinion of the High Court. Held that the suit was maintainable by the Receiver to recover the fair rent payable for the use and occupation of the land under the muchalka, which was good evidence of what was the fair amount of rent. The second defendant, having been held to possess no title to the property, could not afterwards maintain an action for the non-payment of the rent of a portion of such property, due according to the terms of the muchalka. Held also that the right of suit did not extend to recover anything as interest on the rent due. *MORRIS v. On D's death, his sons, without taking out administration, assumed the management of the estate, and each received sums of money on account of it. The widow and daughters of the deceased obtained letters of administration, but limited to the extent of their interests in the estate. In 1888 A brought a suit against his brother F and the other members of the family to recover out of the estate a certain sum of money advanced by him to D. Held that, the estate being unrepresented, the suit could not be maintained (s. 190 of Act X of 1865). The letters of administration issued to the widow and daughters of the deceased, being limited only to the extent of their shares in the estate, were not letters of administration such as are meant by s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). Held also that the only course open to the plaintiff was to take proceedings for the appointment of an administrator of the estate who would either administer it by the payment of the debts and the distribution of the surplus (if any) amongst the heirs, after taking an account of all property already received out of it by the creditors or heirs, or who could be compelled to do so by an administration suit. *FRAMJI DORABJI GHASWALA v. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes considered that the subject-matter of the plaint did not constitute a cause of action to the plaintiff, and dismissed the plaint, subject to the opinion of the High Court. Held that the suit was maintainable by the Receiver to recover the fair rent payable for the use and occupation of the land under the muchalka, which was good evidence of what was the fair amount of rent. The second defendant, having been held to possess no title to the property, could not afterwards maintain an action for the non-payment of the rent of a portion of such property, due according to the terms of the muchalka. Held also that the right of suit did not extend to recover anything as interest on the rent due. *MORRIS v. He was released on the security of G, who executed a bond for the appearance of M at the inquiry into his insolvency. The defendant attested the bond, and wrote in the attestation that G was a solvent person. In consequence of the non-appearance of M, the plaintiff sought to execute his decree against the surety, G, who on his arrest also applied for his discharge on the ground of his insolvency, and was discharged after inquiry. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant for the amount of his decree and cost of execution, on the ground of his representation in the attestation that G was insolvent. The Subordinate Judge rejected, but the District Judge on appeal allowed, the plaintiff's claim. *Held by the High Court, on second appeal, that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant, whether the suit was considered as brought upon a covenant or misrepresentation, as the defendant was neither a co-obligor in the security-bond of G nor did he make any promise in the attestation of it to compensate the plaintiff for the non-appearance of M nor any representation to the plaintiff. that suit a consent decree was passed, which directed the amount due to him to be recovered out of the minor's estate. On the minor's coming of age, he got the consent decree set aside, and the plaintiff had to refund the sum which he had recovered under it. Thereupon the plaintiff sued R to recover the amount as damages for breach of warranty, alleging that she had represented to him that she had authority to incur the debt on behalf of the minor and to bind his estate, whereas she had really no such authority. Held that the plaintiff could not recover, there having been no such misrepresentation as would support an action for a breach of warranty. Assuming that there was a representation, the only possible representation, if the case be treated as coming within s. 235 of the Contract Act, was that the defendant represented that she was the agent of her son. But as the plaintiff knew that the son was an infant, he must have been aware that any representation that defendant was her infant son's duly authorized agent was incorrect, for an infant cannot appoint an agent, and consequently no warranty, such as would support a suit, could arise out of such a representation. Even if it were conceded that there was a representation by R as to her power to bind the minor's estate, it was one on a point of law, and, as such, it was incapable of supporting the suit. *Beatrice v. Plaintiff succeeded, but the Court refused to provide, in its decree, for the repayment to plaintiff of the amount so advanced. On the plaintiff bringing this suit to recover that amount,—Held per SUBRAMANIA, AYYAR, J. (1) that the Court in which the prior suit had been brought had power neither to direct the plaintiff to make the advances to the guardian, as had been done, nor to award the amount so paid as costs in the cause. The present suit therefore was not unsustainable for the reason that the subject-matter of it was one for the Court to have dealt with in the previous suit; (2) that the circumstances of the case were not such as to render the amount recoverable under s. 70 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the defendants could not be said to have enjoyed the benefit of the expenditure; (3) that payments or charges connected with legal expenses in which infants are concerned may, in certain circumstances, come under the head of necessities within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act. properly made in defence of the suit by the guardian ad litem out of the plaintiff's advances might be allowable, if it be alleged and proved that there were reasonable grounds for the defence put forward, though it proved unsuccessful. But that this ground could not now be relied upon on second appeal, inasmuch as it had not been put forward in the Court below, when an issue relating to it could have been framed. Per DAVIES, J., that a matter of this nature can and should be settled in the suit in which it arises, and that, where a plaintiff is successful, a supplementary issue should be framed and tried as to the amount due to him on account of advances made by him to the guardian ad litem for conducting the defence and a decree passed in his favour for the total amount of costs found to have been properly incurred in the case by the guardian out of such advances. *VENKATA VIJAYA GOPALARAJU v. 50. MONEY LENT.

287. — Insufficiently stamped document—Suit on hatchitta for money lent—Evidence Act, s. 91—Whether a suit maintainable if brought upon an insufficiently stamped document, where the defendant admitted the loan.—In a suit brought in the Court of Small Causes on a hatchitta bearing a stamp of one anna, the defendant admitted the loan, but pleaded payment. The Judge, coming to the conclusion that the document sued upon was a promissory note and should have been stamped with a two-anna stamp, refused to admit it in evidence. He also came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had no cause of action independently of the document, and dismissed the suit. Held that the plaintiff had a cause of action independently of the document. Held also that an implied contract to repay money lent always arises from the fact that the money is lent, even though no express promise, either written or verbal, is made to repay it. Therefore, in a case where the defendant admits the loan and has not repaid it, the plaintiff may maintain an action against him for breach of his implied promise or contract, entirely independent of any security which may have been given for the advance. *Akbar v. Civil Courts cannot interfere with that discretion, unless it is exercised in a capricious, wanton, and oppressive manner. The plaintiff was the owner of two houses on each side of the passage of a khilki, or open square, containing three or four other houses. He proposed to connect the two houses by building a storey across the passage at such a height as not to interfere with the passage of those who were entitled to go to and fro. He applied to the local Municipality for permission to build in the manner he proposed. The Municipality forbade the work, on the ground that it was likely to interfere with the access of light and air to the neighbouring houses. The plaintiff thereupon sued the Municipality to establish his right to build the proposed structure. It was contended for the plaintiff that the Municipality ought not to have refused permission in the interest of the neighbouring householders, who were able to protect their own rights in case of injury. Held that the suit would not lie, as the order of the Municipality refusing permission was not an*

276. — Suit for declaration of right to be entered in list of candidates for appointment as member of a Municipal Board—Jurisdiction—Suit brought against the Municipal Board in its corporate capacity.—Where a plaintiff sued for a declaration of his right to have his name entered in the list of persons entitled to be candidates for election as members of a Municipal Board and brought his suit against the Board in its corporate capacity, it was held that such a suit would not lie against the Board, even if, which was not decided, it might lie against the revising authority, by the irregular action of which, it was alleged, the plaintiff's name had been excluded from the list of candidates. ABDUR RAHIM v. gate was erected in a public street (by the permission of the Municipal Council), which obstructed the exercise by the plaintiff and the public of their right to resort to and draw water from a well. It appeared in evidence, although it was not alleged in the plaint, that the plaintiff had to use the land between the newly erected gate and the well when he repaired his house. The plaintiff, not having obtained permission to sue under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 30, sued for a declaration of his right to use the street and draw water from the well and for an injunction compelling the removal of the gate. Held that the suit was within the rule precluding private actions for public wrongs without special damage alleged and proved, and was accordingly not maintainable. SIDDHESWARA v. KRISHNA I. L. R., 14 Mad., 177

281. — Suit to establish right of access to public thoroughfare—Easement—Act XV of 1873, ss. 27, 32, 38—Special damage.—Municipal Committee.—While certain land formed part of a certain public thoroughfare, F had immediate access to such thoroughfare and the use of a certain drain. The Municipal Committee sold such land to M and constructed a new thoroughfare. M used and occupied such land so as to obstruct F's access to the new thoroughfare and his use of the drain. F therefore sued him to establish a right of access to the new thoroughfare over such land and a right to the use of such drain. Held that, having suffered special damage from M's acts, F had a right of action against him, and that such right of action was not affected by the circumstance that M had acquired his title to the land from the Municipal Committee, inasmuch as the Municipal Committee could not have dealt with the old thoroughfare to the special injury of F, and, had it closed the same, would have been bound to provide adequately for his access to the new thoroughfare and for his drainage. FAZAL HAQ v. 283. — Suit to establish right to carry tabuts along public road—Obstruction to public road—Special damage—Public inconvenience.—Plaintiffs, who were Mussulmans, sued to establish their right to carry tabuts in procession along a certain road to the sea, and alleged that the defendants (also Mussulmans) obstructed them in doing so. The plaint, however, did not allege any personal loss or damage to the plaintiffs arising from the obstruction. Both the lower Courts found as a fact that the road along which plaintiffs desired to carry their tabuts to the sea was a public road. Held on special appeal that plaintiffs could not maintain a civil suit in respect of such obstruction, unless they could prove some particular damage to themselves personally, in addition to the general inconvenience occasioned to the public. The mere absence of the religious or sentimental gratification arising from carrying tabuts along a public road is not any such particular loss or injury as would be sufficient, according to English and Indian precedents, to sustain a civil action. 287. ——— Special damage—Lease.—Right of lessee—Trespass.—The plaintiff, a holder of a ten years' lease of the share and rights of one of the co-shares of a village, sued for the demolition of certain buildings and constructions on a plot of land within the area of the village, on the ground that the public had been very much inconvenienced in going to and coming from the road, and in taking carts, carriages, cattle, etc., and that he, by reason of his own inconvenience and also as lessee in possession of the entire rights of his lessor, had legally and justly a right to bring the action. The findings of fact were that by the terms of the lease plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action as representing the zamindari rights of his lessor; that the obstructions complained of existed when the lease was granted; that the roadway mentioned in the plaint was one used by the public in general as a footpath and also for vehicles, and that the buildings complained of had encroached on the road. The suit was dismissed by the first Court, but decreed in appeal by the lower Appellate Court. Held that, in the absence of damage over and above that which in common with the rest of the public the plaintiff has sustained, his action must fail. Public nuisance is actionable only at the suit of a party who has sustained special damage, and the case law of British India in this respect is the same as the rule of English law on the subject. Further, that the lease to plaintiff failed to show either that the land upon which the defendant had built is included in the lease, or that it intended to confer upon the plaintiff any right to question the legality of the erections existing at the time of the lease. Satku v. Ibrahim Aga, I. L. R., 2 Bom., 457, and Karim Baksh v. Budha, I. L. R., 1 All., 249, referred to. RAMPHAL RAI v. RAGHUNANDAN PRASAD

[I. L. R., 10 All., 493]

288. ——— Suit by zamindar for removal of building—Obstruction by building—Special damage.—The plaintiff, who is the zamindar of the village, brought an action claiming to have a chabutra or building erected by the defendant in one of the village roads removed. The road in question was a katcha road used by the village over which the public had a right of way, and it had been dedicated as a road for the use and convenience of the general public. The plaintiff got a decree for the removal of the chabutra, and the defendant appealed. Held that the rule of English law that a member of the public cannot maintain an action for obstruction to a public road without showing special injury to himself beyond that suffered by any member of the public does not apply to a zamindar who or whose predecessor in title had dedicated to the public the road over his zamindari land. A zamindar, in giving the public a right of road of way over his land, does not give the public or any one else a right to interfere with the soil of the road, as by erecting a building upon it. In such a case the zamindar has, in common with the public, the right to use the road as a road; over and above it, he has a right to the soil in the road, which he had never given to the public. In an action of this kind the zamindar does not sue as a guardian of the public, but in respect of an interference with his own rights of property. *Baroda Prasad Mustafee v. 289. ——— Suit to remove obstruction in public right of way—Special injury—Cause of action—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—In a suit for the removal of an obstruction in a public pathway, it was found by the Courts below that the plaintiffs were deprived of the only means of grazing their cattle by the obstruction, and that they lost some cows thereby. It was contended, on behalf of the defendant on second appeal, that such damage would not entitle the plaintiffs to maintain a suit in the Civil Court. Held that the injury caused to the plaintiffs, by the obstruction of the way leading from the village where they resided to that in which they had their fields and pastures, was peculiar to them and to their calling, and it caused them substantial loss of time and inconvenience; and that it was sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to maintain the action. Held also that the death of the cows was too remotely and indirectly connected with the obstruction to furnish a cause of action. Wintarbottom v. Act X of 1876, s. 4—Its application to suits between private persons.—The plaintiff and his co sharers in a kulkarni vatan entered into an agreement in 1869 for the performance of the duties of the vatan by the several sharers in turn. The agreement provided that, if sharers prevented the nomination of a sharer to officiate in his turn, he should pay Rs 100 as damages to the person thus excluded from office. The plaintiff alleged that in 1883 it was his turn to officiate; that the defendants, instead of electing him in accordance with the agreement, nominated another person, who was confirmed in the appointment by the Collector. The plaintiff therefore sued the defendants to recover Rs 100 as damages for breach of the agreement of 1869. Held that the agreement could not be enforced by a civil suit, and it was opposed to the policy of s 40 of Bombay Act III of 1874, which contemplates a free election of an officer by the whole body of registered representative vatan-dars to whom the Collector issues his notice an election unfettered by any promises made before hand by any of the sharers. Held also that a suit in respect of any injury caused by exclusion from office or service is barred by the second paragraph of cl. (a) of s. 4 of Act X of 1876. Having regard to the wording of

319. — Suit for unauthorised payment made by assignee—Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), ss. 28 and 29—Fraud.—The account of an estate, formerly in the hands of a derivative executor who became insolvent and died in 1856, having been pending in Court for many years some of the parties being interested in the original estate and others as the insolvent's creditors, a compromise was effected, under which a suit, brought in 1858 by the Official Assignee, representing the deceased insolvent, was dismissed by the consent of parties in 1875. Part of a sum of money, paid to the credit of the insolvent's estate in pursuance of the compromise, was made over, upon the passing of the consent-decree, with the knowledge of the assignee, but without notice to or the sanction of the Court to a person who had assisted in taking the account. From the representatives of the latter, he being now deceased, the successor in office of the assignee claimed repayment. In regard to the facts that he was neither a party to nor had any control over, the compromised suit; that he owed no duty to the Court in respect of it nor to the creditors of the estate; and that he had taken no unfair advantage of the assistance,—Held that there were no grounds upon which this repayment could be claimed. ABDOOL HOSSEIN ZENAIL ABADI v. of the share. After this, some prior mortgagees obtained a decree in the Sudder Court in 1847, to the effect that the disputed property should be taken away from the plaintiff's ancestor and given to the prior mortgagees till their lien was satisfied, when he should obtain possession as before. The lien of the prior mortgagees was satisfied in 1870, when the defendants obtained possession. 337. ——— Suit for possession by unregistered purchaser after ejectment.—Benq. Act VIII of 1859, ss. 26, 64.—Effect of sale of tenure by shareholder in zamindari.—Onus of proof.—K, the recorded tenant of a mirasi mokurrari tenure, died leaving G, his son and heir, who sold the tenure, which eventually came into the hands of the plaintiffs' father, and afterwards on his death became vested in the plaintiffs, but neither they nor their father, though they made attempts to do so, ever obtained the registration of their names as tenants. B, one of the two shareholders in the zamindari, brought a suit for arrears of rent of the tenure against G, and in execution of the decree he obtained in that suit the tenure was sold and purchased by the other zamindar, by whom the plaintiffs were dispossessed. Held that the plaintiffs were not precluded by the fact that their names were not registered as tenants, under s. 26 of the Rent Act, from bringing a suit to recover possession of the tenure. The holder of the decree in execution of which the tenure was sold, assuming him to be only a shareholder in the zamindari right, had no right under s. 64 to sell the tenure, but only the interest of the person against whom the decree was passed. The onus was on the defendant to show that the sale under the decree for rent was of such a nature as to give him priority over the plaintiffs. KRISHNA CHUNDER GHOSH v. RAJ KRISHNA BANDYOPADHYA

The mortgagees, to save the property from sale, paid up certain arrears of Government revenue. Subsequently the defendant, who was the representative of the mortgagors under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, paid the original sum due under the mortgage into Court. The mortgagees withdrew the money so paid in and deposited the mortgage-deed in Court. The mortgagees then, after relinquishing possession of the mortgaged property, sued to recover the money which they had paid as Government revenue by sale of the mortgaged property. Held that, though the mortgagees might originally have treated the amount paid by them as Government revenue as part of the mortgage-money, they did not by such payment obtain a lien independently of their position as mortgagees, and when once they had abandoned their lien on the mortgaged property by accepting the money paid into Court by the mortgagors and by relinquishing possession of the mortgaged property, they could not afterwards revive it; and their suit, which was for realization of the Government revenue paid by them by sale of the mortgaged property, must fail. Samble—A mortgagee, who had given up his lien under circumstances similar to those above described, might bring a simple money suit to recover money paid by him to save the property from sale in execution for arrears of Government revenue. Kinu Ram Dass v. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), ss. 185, 186—Disposal of surplus proceeds—Distribution amongst creditors of defaulters—Suit by one of such creditors against another—Cause of action.—An estate which had been mortgaged separately to two different mortgagees was sold for default in payment of Government revenue. By the sale a much larger sum than was sufficient to satisfy the arrears of revenue was realized. The Collector, instead of paying the surplus to the defaulter, mortgagor, paid therewith one of the mortgagees in full and the other in part. The mortgagee who had been paid in part only sued the other mortgagee for the balance due on his (the plaintiff's) mortgage, alleging that it was prior to that of the defendant and ought to have been paid off in full. Held that the suit would not lie. notice of the transfer was given to the zamindar. The zamindar subsequently brought a suit against the tenant for arrears of rent and obtained a decree, in execution of which he caused the tenure to be sold, and himself became the purchaser. The plaintiff took proceedings under s. 811 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale, but his application was rejected, on the ground—an erroneous one—that he was not a proper party to take such proceedings, and he did not appeal against the order rejecting it. Held, in a suit brought against the zamindar and the tenant to set aside the sale, that in the absence of fraud the suit was not maintainable. The plaintiff might have satisfied the rent decree and so prevented the sale, or he might have appealed against the order rejecting his application to set it aside; but having done neither and the zamindar having had no notice of the transfer, the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the proceedings in the rent suit as a nullity on the ground that he was not a party to that suit. *PANYK CHUNDER SINGH v. At the sale the tenure was purchased by N. S then brought a suit against B and N to set aside the sale on the ground that the rent-decree and all execution proceedings taken thereunder were fraudulent, and alleging that B was the actual purchaser in the name of N. maintainable, the matter being one for determination in execution proceedings under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure,—Held (1) that, although the sale was contrary to the provisions of s. 19 of the Transfer of Property Act, that section being for the benefit only of a particular class of persons, namely, those concerned with a right to redeem mortgaged property, such a sale was not void, but voidable; (2) that the question, being one arising between the parties to the suit wherein the sale was made and relating to execution, could not be raised and decided in a suit, but should be raised and tried only in execution proceedings taken under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the sale set aside if such relief were not, for any reason, barred; (3) that the sale having been confirmed, such confirmation was final, and precluded the mortgagor from seeking the relief to which they would otherwise have been entitled; and (4) that, notwithstanding such sale and confirmation, the mortgagor might not be precluded from suing to redeem the mortgaged property on payment of the amount given credit for by the mortgagee in respect of the sale. MAYAN PATHUMI v. the decrees made an order setting aside such sale on that ground. S thereupon sued B to have such order set aside, and to have such sale confirmed, and to obtain possession of such property. Held that, inasmuch as such order had not been made under s. 257 of Act VIII of 1859, but had been made at the instance of a purchaser under another decree, and B's decree, as a matter of fact, had not been satisfied, S's suit to have such order set aside was maintainable. SANGAM RAM v. 376. Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 256, 257—Sale in execution—Order of attachment and sale notifications not signed by Judge, but by Munsarim—Sale set aside—Equitable relief.—On the 21st August 1876 certain immoveable property belonging to M was put up for sale and was purchased by R. On the 2nd April 1877 such sale was set aside under s. 256 of Act VIII of 1859, on the ground that the order attaching such property and the notifications of sale had not, as required by s. 222, been signed by the Court executing the decree, but by the Munsarim of the Court. On the 27th June 1877 M conveyed such property to H, who purchased it bona fide and for value, and satisfied the incumbrances existing thereon. On the 1st April 1878 R sued H and M to have the order setting aside such sale set aside, and to have such sale confirmed in his favour, on the ground that it had been improperly set aside under s. 256 of Act VIII of 1859, the judgment-debtor not having been prejudiced by the irregularities in respect whereof such sale had been set aside. Held by OLDFIELD, J., that although such sale might have been improperly set aside, yet, inasmuch as the order of attachment and the notifications of sale could have no legal effect, having been signed by the Munsarim of the Court executing the decree, and not by the Court, as required by s. 222 of Act VIII of 1859; and inasmuch as it would be inequitable, after the incumbrances on such property had been satisfied and the state of things changed to allow R, after standing by for a year, and permitting dealings with the property to come in and take advantage of the change of circumstances, and obtain a property become much more valuable at the price he originally offered, R ought not to obtain the relief which he sought. Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the fact that the Court executing the decree had not signed the order of attachment and the notifications of sale vitiated the proceedings in execution ab initio, and rendered the sale which R desired to have confirmed void and R's suit therefore failed, and had properly been dismissed. RAM DIAL v. Thereupon the auction-purchaser filed a suit for a declaration that the sale had been improperly set aside, and for a confirmation of the sale. Held that the suit would lie. barred under the last clause of s. 312 nor under s. 588, cl. 16. Held also that the rules framed by Government under s. 320 of the Code only restricted the powers of the Court to interfere with the procedure of the execution of decrees transferred to the Collector. They did not come in the way of a party bringing a civil suit to establish his purchase. Held also that the Collector had no power under s. 311 of the Code to set aside the sale and receive payment from the judgment-debtor. MAHURADAS v. The money not having been so applied, the holder of the lien attached the property and applied to the Court for its sale. To save the property from being sold, plaintiff's said brother further paid the amount of the lien into Court; and at about the same time the mortgagor sold the property to defendant. Plaintiff's brother had never obtained possession of the property, and had since died. Upon plaintiff suing to recover (in addition to the mortgage amount, liability for which was not disputed) the amount of the lien so paid into Court to save the property from sale. Held that, inasmuch as plaintiff could only succeed by showing that by such payment a charge was created upon the land (the money not having been paid at the request or for the benefit of the defendant), the suit must fail. There is no provision in the Transfer of Property Act to support the proposition (involved by the plaintiff's suit) that a second mortgagee may, by a transaction between himself and the first mortgagee, without knowledge or concurrence on the part of the mortgagor, acquire a new right over the mortgaged property. Per SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, J.—That as against the mortgagor's plaintiff would have been entitled to add the sums paid by him to the prior incumbrancer to the mortgage amount. But as the mortgage was usufructuary and plaintiff had never obtained possession, he had acquired no charge on the mortgaged property for the money recoverable by him under s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. The amount sought to be added thereto consequently stood on a similar footing, and the plaintiff's contention that a charge in respect of it existed in his favour was unsustainable. NOGENDER CHUNDER GHOSH v. 381. — Suit by purchaser at execution sale to sue for partition—Certificate of purchase by Registrar—Conveyance—Declaration of right to share—Rules of Court, 415, 431.—The position of a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree of the High Court after he has obtained a certificate from the Registrar under rule 415 of the Rules of Court is that of a person clothed with a right to a conveyance in virtue of a contract; he does not hold, save as regards the parties to the contract of sale, the position of an owner. When the sale is confirmed, the purchaser is entitled to a conveyance, and until he obtains a conveyance the property in the estate purchased does not, having regard to rule 431, pass to him so as to give him rights as against parties not bound by the decree under which the sale took place. All that passes to him as against the defendant in that suit is an equitable estate and a right to a conveyance of the property. And therefore, as the estate in the property purchased has not passed, the purchaser is not entitled to maintain a suit for partition. In such a suit he could not on partition give a good conveyance to the parties interested in the estate, nor would he be entitled to a declaration of his share in the property. JOHUR MULL KHOORBA v. B obtained a decree directing the sale of the property in satisfaction of his two mortgages, and it was sold accordingly. Subsequent to the sale, C obtained a similar decree upon his mortgage, and, having unsuccessfully applied in his own suit to have his decree satisfied out of the sale-proceeds after payment of B's first mortgage of July 1874, brought a suit under the last paragraph but one of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code to recover the amount received by B in respect of B's mortgage of November 1877. Held that to read the words "an incumbrance" in s. 295, prov. (c), of the Civil Procedure Code as "an incumbrance or incumbrances," so as to give priority to B's mortgage of November 1877 over C's earlier mortgage of March 1877, would be to defeat the intention of the Legislature as expressed in that section and also in s. 80 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that C was entitled to maintain the suit. *MITTHU LAL v. The French Court required C to produce a copy of an English Court's judgment acknowledging and sanctioning C's claim against M. C sued S to obtain a declaration of his right to recover the amount due by M on the bond. Held that, whether or not his lien was destroyed by the sale of the ship in French territory, C was not entitled to any of the proceeds of the sale, either at the date of the sale or of his claim in the French Court, and the denial by S of C's right to any of the proceeds of the sale gave C no cause of action. *CHITHAMBARA v. The plaintiff sued to recover damages for slander, the statement complained of being alleged in the plaint to have been made by the defendant while being examined as a witness during the hearing of a case before a Magistrate. It was found that the statement was made in answer to questions put to the defendant as a witness and allowed by the Court as relevant to the case. After plaintiff's evidence had been concluded, in which he stated that there was no enmity between him and defendant, the defendant was examined by the Court, and stated that there was enmity between him and plaintiff, and on the Court inquiring to know what was the cause of enmity, defendant used words conveying the meaning that plaintiff's descent was illegitimate. In a suit for slander instituted by the plaintiff, Held by BRODBURST, J., that under the circumstances, the statement complained of was made by defendant while deposing in the witness-box, and was therefore absolutely privileged. Per MAHMOOD.

RIGHT OF SUIT—concluded.72. WITNESS—concluded.

J. (contra), that the question whether or not the statement complained of was made by defendant in course of his deposition, or after it was finished and when he was no longer in the witness-box, had not been tried, and the order remanding the case for trial on the merits was right. Further, that the English law of slander as forming part of the law of defamation, and as such drawing somewhat arbitrary distinctions between words actionable per se and words requiring proof of special or actual damage, is not applicable to this country, either by reason of any statutory provision or by any uniform course of decision sufficient to establish such distinctions as part of the common law of British India; that whilst the English law of defamation recognizes no distinction between defamation as such and personal insult in civil liability, the law of British India recognizes personal insult conveyed by abusive language as actionable per se, without proof of special or actual damage; that such abusive and insulting language, unless excused or protected by any other rule of law, is in itself a substantive cause of action and a civil injury, apart from defamation, and that malice is an element of liability for abusive and insulting language, and that such malice will be presumed or inferred, unless the contrary is shown; that when the defendant is not absolutely privileged and protected by reason of the office or occasion on which he employed such language, he renders himself subject to a civil liability for damages, irrespective of any plea of justification based upon proving the truth of the statements contained in the abusive and insulting language complained of; that the rule of English law as to the privilege or protection of a witness in regard to defamatory statements made in the witness-box is based upon a public policy which is equally applicable to insulting and abusive language used by such witness; and such statements, when made in the witness-box, are privileged and protected, even though made maliciously and falsely, so long as they are relevant to the inquiry in the broadest sense of the phrase; and that, even where such statements have no reference to the inquiry, the defendant may prove the absence of malice, and that they were made in good faith for the public good. *DAWAN SINGH v. 16. ———— User of twenty years to support servitude—Extent and mode of user—Calcutta Municipal Act (Beng. Act IV of 1876).—As establishing his right of way over the defendant's passage, the plaintiff relied upon a user of it, several times in the year, for twenty years prior to the defendant's interruption of it, by mehters for the purpose of removing the contents of a cess-pool connected with a privy belonging to the plaintiffs' house. The facts indicated by way of limit to the user of the passage only showed that it must be a reasonable user for the above purpose. There was no agreement specifying times or occasions of access, and the inference was that, if the plaintiffs had thought fit to use the passage more frequently than they did, they were at liberty to do so. In and after 1876, instead of the plaintiffs' mehters, those employed by the Municipality came and went upon the passage, not at distant intervals, but daily, the plaintiffs under bye-laws, in conformity with Bengal Act IV of 1876, being bound to give them access and the system being to clean the place daily. Held that the above was neither a discontinuance by the plaintiffs of their user nor an aggravation of the servitude. Also that, although a servitude gained for one purpose cannot be used for another, the purposes before and after 1876 being identical, the user proved prior to that year supported a right in the plaintiffs to use the passage for giving access to the servants of the Municipality for the above purpose at reasonable and convenient times. JADULAL MULLICK v. thereon. No privy was built with or attached to the hut, the occupants of the hut using the cart, or neighbouring carts, for natural purposes. The plaintiff bought the hut, knocked it down, and proceeded to build a substantial dwelling with a privy on the site of the old hut. Defendant denied his right to build a privy, or to have any right of way for sweepers to the said privy when built. Held that the suitable enjoyment of the hut, when it was originally built, implied the use of a privy, whenever the occupants of the hut should think fit to build one; and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to build a privy, and consequently also to a way of necessity for a sweeper to have access to the privy when built. The occupants of the old hut had been allowed, as a way of necessity, and had always used as a means of access to that portion of the site of the old hut on which the new privy was now being built, a path which went in a straight line from the gate in the outer wall of the cart to the front door of the hut; and thence, skirting the hut, to the site of the new privy. The plaintiff now claimed a right of way for his sweeper in a direct line from the outer gate to the new privy, thus avoiding the front entrance of the house. Held that, having regard to the class of persons who had lived in the old hut (who were of low caste), there could have arisen, up to the present time, no reasonable necessity for two ways to the site in question, and therefore the plaintiff was limited to the old way enjoyed by his predecessor in title. Quære—Whether, if the leasees had been persons belonging to one of the higher castes, it would not be right to take into consideration the prejudice entertained by members of such castes against being brought into close proximity with persons following the occupation of a sweeper; and, if necessary, to modify the general principle of English law, which lays down that a grantee is only entitled to one way of necessity. *ESUBAI v. 32. ——— Place dedicated by owner of land for convenience of occupiers of adjoining houses—User of such open space—Covenant or grant presumed—Easement—Public land—Encroachment—Injunction.—The plaintiff and defendant occupied houses situated in the same lane and opposite each other. Close to both houses was an open space in which a cross had stood. The plaintiff alleged that the said vacant space was originally intended for, and had always been used by the occupants of his house and the residents in the lane in common for, the purposes of recreation, save where the cross stood. The cross had been for many years visited by Christian worshippers who prayed and worshipped there. The plaintiff also alleged that, in addition to the general use of the open space, he and his predecessors in title and the occupants of his said house had for more than twenty years used the open space as a footway and a way for carriages and other vehicles to approach the said house and to stand and be able to turn there. He complained that the defendant had wrongfully removed the cross, and enclosed the greater portion of the said open space, and he prayed for a declaration that he and the occupants of his house were entitled to the use of the said space for purposes of recreation, and as a footway and carriageway and for an injunction. The defendant pleaded that the whole of the open space formerly belonged to a Portuguese religious confraternity who were the fazendares of both his property and the plaintiff's; that this confraternity had permitted the cross to be erected on the land, at which the residents of the houses of the plaintiff and defendant and other adjacent houses who were then Portuguese used to assemble and worship; that the Portuguese having left the locality the cross was removed, and the part of the open space which had been enclosed by the defendant had been sold to him by the confraternity in 1887. He denied the use of the space alleged by the plaintiff. Held that the evidence was not sufficient to establish that the land in dispute had been dedicated to the public, but that, on the evidence, the Court was justified in presuming, and ought to presume, a covenant on the part of the fazendari owners of the cart to keep the lane, including the upper end of it, open for the use of the owners of the houses abutting upon it. Such a covenant should be presumed equally in the case of a land-owner giving land for building purposes to fazendari tenants in a perpetual tenure at a fixed rent, and in the case of a owner selling land out and out for building purposes. RANCHORDAS ANTHABHAI v. MANEKAL GORDHAN-DAS . . . I. L. R., 17 Bom., 648

33. ——— Easement of necessity—Easements Act (V of 1882)—Act I of 1872, s. 114, illus. (g)—Presumption against plaintiff from failure to produce his title-deeds.—The plaintiffs were owners of an hotel, and the defendant of certain adjacent property. The two properties had at one time been united, and at that time the manager of the hotel on behalf of the owner used to obtain water for the purposes of the hotel from a certain spring by means of a road which ran over land which subsequently became the defendant's. There was another but smaller and much less convenient path from the hotel to the spring. The plaintiffs became owners of their portion of the property in 1886, and the defendant of his portion in 1888. The plaintiffs continued to use the above-mentioned road through the defendant's property for the purpose of getting water from the hotel until 1889, when the defendant refused to permit them any longer to use the road. The plaintiffs accordingly sued the defendant for a declaration of their right of way over the said road, but refused to put in evidence the deed under which they became owners of the hotel property. Held upon these facts that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any right of way over the land in question. Owing to the non-production by the plaintiffs of their title-deed, it must be presumed as against them that the evidence afforded thereby would be unfavourable to their claim, and no right of way in favour of the plaintiffs could be shown to arise otherwise, either as an easement of necessity or as an easement the intention to grant which might be inferred. *Chera Surnakar v. 34. ———— Purchase of land adjoining purchaser's land—Way of access—Way of necessity—Deed of sale, Construction of.—A person purchasing a plot adjoining his own land and having access to the plot through his land cannot acquire a way of necessity over his vendor's land of which the plot formed a part. The fact that, if the plot had been sold to a third person, he would have acquired a way of necessity, does not affect the question. Where a portion of an estate is sold, a right of way leading to such portion may be created by the use of general words, provided that the circumstances existing at the time of the sale were such as to justify the belief that such was the intention of the parties. Where the words used in a Marathi deed of sale were "sarva hakk wa sambandh" (i.e., All rights and accompaniments).—Held that the words in themselves, apart from the circumstances at the time of the sale, did not include a right of way over the vendor's property as conveyed along with the portion of the land sold; but if there was an old path leading across the vendor's adjoining ground to the plot sold, and the purposes for which the plot was sold, and the conduct of the parties were such as to justify an inference that by the use of these words it was the intention of the parties to convey the right to use the path, it would be open to the Judge to find as a fact that such was the intention. *MUNICIPALITY OF THE CITY OF POONA v. [3 W. R., 218]

6. ———— Natural water-course.—The right which a riparian proprietor has, under certain restrictions, to the use of the water of a natural water-course, has no application to a water-course artificially constructed; and the mere fact of riparian proprietorship gives no rights whatever over such a stream. BHOOP NARAIN SINGH v. KERAMUT ALI

7. ———— Obstruction to flow of water—Encroachment.—The plaintiff and defendant were proprietors of land and gardens on opposite sides of a tidal creek, which sides were protected by walls. The defendant, the wall on his side becoming dilapidated, constructed a fresh one, altering its direction, and encroaching five feet upon the bed of the stream. In a suit for possession of land by demolishing the said wall, the plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to the solum on which it was built, that his navigation was obstructed, and that there was a danger of his screw-house falling down. It appeared, however, that the Government, and not the plaintiff, was the owner of the solum, and that the plaintiff neither claimed nor proved that he was entitled to the flow of the water as it had been accustomed to flow, and that that flow was seriously and sensibly diverted so as to be an injury to his rights. Held, reversing the decree of the High Court, that the plaintiff had failed to show either damnum or injuria, and therefore had no right of action. *KALI KISHEN TAGORE v. 8. ———— Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 6, 7, 17—Natural streams—Surface water.—The owners of a tank fed by natural streams, which depended for their supply on natural rainfall and surface water, sued for an injunction to restrain superior riparian owners from damming the streams or interfering with the supply of water, over which the plaintiffs claimed a right of easement. The issue as to the ownership of the land on which the streams rose was undecided. Held (1) The Easements Act only declared the existing law as to easements over water; (2) An easement can therefore be acquired in regard to the water of the rainfall. But surface water not flowing in a stream and not permanently collected in a pool, tank, or otherwise is not a subject of easement by prescription, though it may be the subject of an express grant or contract; (3) It is the natural right of every owner of land to collect or dispose of all water on the surface which does not pass in a defined channel; (4) Riparian owners are entitled to use and consume the water of the stream for drinking and household purposes, for watering their cattle, for irrigating their land, and for purposes of manufacture, subject to the conditions (i) that the use is reasonable, (ii) that it is required for their purposes as owners of the land, and (iii) that it does not destroy or render useless or materially diminish or affect the application of the water by inferior riparian owners in the exercise either of their natural right of their right of easement if any; (5) It was therefore necessary to ascertain where the streams rose, and the course, source, and length of their tributaries. PERUMAL v. RAMASAMI. I. L. R., 11 Mad., 16

9. ————— Water-course—Mamlatdar, Jurisdiction of—Easements Act (V of 1882). s. 7.—The law as to riparian owners is the same in India as in England, and is stated in illus. (h) of s. 7 of the Easements Act (V of 1882). Each proprietor has a right to a reasonable use of the water as it passes his land, but, in the absence of some special custom, he has no right to dam it back, or exhaust it, so as to deprive other riparian owners of like use. What would constitute an unreasonable diversion of water such as to disturb the use of the lower riparian owners is a question of fact which the Legislature has given a Mamlatdar jurisdiction to decide. NARAYAN HARI DEVAL v. KESHAV SHIVRAM DETAL. I. L. R., 23 Bom., 506

10. ————— Proprietor of water-course, Right of—Proof of user by other persons.—The proprietor of a pyne has a right to allow or to deny the use of water flowing through it to other persons, unless they have also a clearly-defined right enabling them to control the water and convert it to their own use,—a right clearly found to have originated in some grant or valid contract, or to have been exercised for so long a period that such title may be presumed. INDURJEET KOOR v. LUCHMEER KOOR. [14 W. R., 349]

11. ————— Right to discharge water on to another's land on lower level—Drainage.—There is no reason why the proprietor of land on a higher level should not, for the purpose of keeping his land drained, claim a right to have the water which falls thereon run off over adjoining land on a lower level. KOPIL POORER v. MANICK SAHOO. [20 W. R., 287]

12. ————— Easement—Embankment—Drainage—Right to drainage of surplus surface water through natural water-course.—The right of the owner of high lands to drain off its surplus surface water through the adjacent lower grounds is incident to the ownership of land in this country. Where the defendants had erected a dam across a natural water-course which was found to interfere with the natural drainage of the surplus rain-water of the adjacent lands of the plaintiffs, and where the lower Court had ordered that the dam be altogether removed,—Held that the Court was wrong in taking it for granted that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the whole dam removed, but should have inquired how far the erection of the dam interfered with the plaintiffs' right. ABDUL HAKIM v. GUNESH DUTT. [I. L. R., 12 Cal., 323]

13. ————— Obstruction to flow of water—Erection of bund to stop flow of water.—Where water flows in its natural course from somewhere outside A's land, through it, and onwards to other people's land, A is not entitled to stop the flow by an embankment across it, unless he can make out some special right to do so. Such course is a part of the natural condition of the land, and the flow of the water over it, when it occurs, is a natural incident. CHUNROO SINGH v. MULLICK KHAYRUT AHMED. [18 W. R., 525]

14. ————— Claim to erect bund cutting off water from neighbouring lands.—A party claiming to erect a bund in a natural flowing river, so as entirely to cut off the water from another party, is bound to prove that he has acquired the legal right to do so by user. HEERANUND SAHOO v. KHUBERBOONISSA. 15 W. R., 516

15. ————— Deprivation of right to a rise of water, by breaking bund—Claim to repaired bund.—Deprivation of the right to a rise of water is an injury, and a claim to repair a bund for the purpose of securing such right is not answered by the tender of another bund quite as good. SHUNKER SAHOO v. GURBHOO SAHOO. [15 W. R., 216]

16. ————— Infringement of right to water—Suit to remove obstruction and for damages—Cause of action.—In a suit to compel defendant to remove an embankment recently constructed on his own land, on the allegation that it infringed plaintiff's right of irrigation by a certain channel, where it was found that the embankment in question was no manner of obstruction to the water-course by that channel,—Held that, to entitle plaintiff to a decree, there must have been some actual infringement of his right by the defendant, and not merely some act whereby, as it were, that right was denied or questioned. SHAMA CHURN CHATTERJEE v. HOIDONATH BANERJEE. 11 W. R., 2

17. ————— Cause of action.—In order to maintain an action upon an infringement of a right (as where an obstruction is made to a natural flow of water), it is not necessary to show that there has been any subsequent injury consequent on such infringement. *RAM CHAND CHUCKERBUTTY v. 19. ———— Right to raise embankment to diminish flow of water into reservoir.—Where parties by agreement in a butwarra restricted their rights by the condition that one of their number was to have full use of the water in a reservoir, the others were held not to be at liberty to set up, even on their own lands, an embankment round the reservoir so as to diminish materially the flow of water into it. GOUD SAHAY SINGH v. SHERO SAHAY SINGH . . . 15 W. R., 94

20. ———— Erection of bund to keep water in reservoir.—Water falling on A's land and collected in a reservoir there, used to flow on to B's land. Held that B had no right to the use of the water, and that A was entitled to erect on his own land a bund to prevent the water flowing on to B's land. BUNSEER SAHOO v. KALSH PERSHAD . . . 13 W. R., 414

21. ———— Right of owner of two properties.—Dispersion of rain-water.—The owner of two properties may conduct through troughs the rain-water accumulating on one property over a water-course to the other property before it reaches another water-course into which the rain-water, unless diverted, would naturally flow. RAMBUTTUN NROOKE v. PHOOL SINGH . . . W. R., 1864, 147

22. ———— Cessation to make use of water.—Revocation of permission.—Where a party who had enjoyed the permissive use of the water of a tank does not use it for four years from the date of its further excavation, the permission may be taken to be revoked. GOOROO CHURN SOOR v. SREE CHURN THOSH . . . 15 W. R., 308

23. ———— Right to discharge rainfall overland.—Abandonment of right.—Exposition of the right of discharging the rainfall on one's land through a water-course over another's, and of the abandonment of such right. KHEETUR NATH GHOSH v. PROSUNNO THOSH . . . 7 W. R., 498

24. ———— Abandonment of right to water.—Construction of new waterway.—Where a party suing for the use of a waterway was found to have allowed it to be filled up without objection, and another of the same description to be constructed, which he had used for a year or two, he was held to have abandoned his right of user to the former waterway. JAGTENDROO CHUCKERBUTTY v. JAGAT CHUNDER CHOWDHRY . . . 12 W. R., 519

25. ———— Irrigation channels.—Power of Collector to regulate water-supply.—In a suit between raiyats holding lands under Government, in which the Collector of the district was joined as second defendant, it appeared that the first defendant, in pursuance of an order of the Sub-Collector, made on a petition preferred by him, had opened a new irrigation channel, thereby materially diminishing the supply of water necessary for the cultivation of the plaintiff's land and causing damage to him. The lower Court passed a decree for damage and issued an injunction directing that the channel be closed. Held that the order of the Sub-Collector was in excess of his powers. RANCHANDRA v. NARAYANASAMI . . . I L. R., 16 Mad., 333

26. ———— Water rights for irrigation where a stream flows through separate estates.—Relative rights of upper and lower proprietors on the banks to the use of the water.—Issues not raising actual rights.—A riparian owner, where a stream flows in a channel down from a property higher up, is entitled to the flow of water without interruption, and without substantial diminution caused by the upper proprietor, who may for legitimate purposes withdraw so much only of the water as will not materially lessen the downward flow on to his neighbour's land. In this suit the upper proprietor claimed the right to dam up a stream on his own estate, and to impound so much of its water as he might find convenient for irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below. He has no such right, in the absence of a right obtained by him in virtue of contract with the lower proprietors, or acquired by him as a consequence of prescriptive use. His common law right is to take for the purpose of irrigation so much water only as can be abstracted without materially diminishing what is to be allowed to descend. What quantity of water can be abstracted and used without infringing that essential condition, must, in all cases, be a question of the circumstances depending mainly upon the size of the stream and the proportion which the water taken bears to its entire volume. In this suit, the upper proprietor's claim having been put too high, the real question as to the proportion of his share had been omitted. No issue had raised it, and no evidence had been given to determine it approximately. The Court of first instance and the first Appellate Court had attempted to decree what they considered would be the just proportion, but the High Court had rightly pointed out that there had been no materials before the Courts upon which a right to a more limited kind than that which had been in excess claimed could be decreed to the upper proprietor; and the suit had been rightly dismissed. DERI PERSHAD SINGH v. 7. ——— Offering obstruction to persons wrongfully distraining—Power of distraint.—The law confers (certain conditions being first complied with) on landholders and their authorized agents power to distrain the moveable property of their tenants for the recovery of arrears of rents due by them. In all such cases the landholder acts on his own responsibility, and if, in the alleged exercise of this power, he attempts to seize the goods of his tenant when no rent is in arrear, mere obstruction to the seizure is not an offence, nor where made by several persons does it constitute rioting. ANONYMOUS. 8 Mad., Ap., 11

8. ——— Attempting to stop what rioters thought an illegal procession.—In the case of a very serious riot, in order to stop a procession which the rioters disapproved of, the rioters were acquitted by the Magistrate because he thought they might have considered their act justified because the procession was illegal by virtue of some orders (which did not appear) which might have been efficacious in point of law. Held that the thinking a thing legal which is not so can be no defence to a man who violates a rule of law; that there was no evidence that the procession was illegal, and that, if it were, the accused were bound to invoke the aid of the tribunals charged with the enforcement of the law. ANONYMOUS. 7 Mad., Ap., 35

9. ——— Common object—Persons coming armed with sticks on purpose to fight—Affray.—Two parties were convicted of rioting. One party consisted of not less than five persons, who were all found to have been assembled together in the fight which took place, and it was also found that they, as well as their opponents, came armed with sticks, prepared to fight, and did fight. Held that they were not improperly convicted of rioting, their common object being to assault their opponents. The other party only consisted of four persons. It was not found what object they had in common with the first party. The fight did not occur in a public place. Held that, they were not properly convicted of rioting. Held also that, had the fight occurred in a public place, it might have been held that the common object of both parties was to commit an affray. *QUEEN v. The complainant, who with some other co-sharers represented an eleven annas interest in the tank, went there with some of these co-sharers to protest on the ground that the accused had no share or interest in the tank. A fight ensued, in the course of which some of the complainant's party received slight injuries. Held that the accused were rightly convicted of rioting and voluntarily causing hurt under ss. 147 and 323 of the Penal Code. *Ganowri Lall Das v. Queen-Empress, I. L. On motion to make the rule absolute, it was held that the rule was served in time, and that the service of it in the Gaikvad's territories, with the consent of the Gaikvad, was valid service. Quare.—Whether the service would have been valid if such consent had not been obtained. HARIVALLABHDAS KALLIANDAS v. Where a rule was granted "to show cause why the conviction should not be set aside, and the case sent back for re-trial," and it came on for hearing before a Bench other than that which had granted it,—Held that the terms of the rule did not prevent the Bench hearing it from discharging the accused. MILAN KHAN v. Bombay Land Revenue Act (V of 1879), s. 314, rules 101 and 111, cl. 3 (a)—Survey settlement, Meaning of.—The accused was charged before a second class Magistrate with digging earth within a space of two cubits of an earthen boundary-mark, in contravention of rule 101 of the Rules made by Government under s. 214 (g) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879). The Magistrate convicted the accused under rule 111, cl. 3 (a), and sentenced him to a fine of one rupee. Held that rule 101 is not such a rule as can be legally made under s. 214 (g) of the Code. It is not a rule "for the administration of a survey settlement." Such a settlement is a settlement of the land revenue, and relates only to such matters as are referred to in Ch. VIII of the Code, and not to boundaries or boundary-marks, which were dealt with in Ch. IX. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. IRAPPA . . . 1 L. R., 13 Bom., 291

2. Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VII of 1888), s. 30—Rules framed by the Local Government under s. 320 of Act XIV of 1882 as amended by s. 30 of Act VII of 1888, Effect of—Sale in execution of decree—Confirmation of sale—Collector's power to confirm or set aside a sale.—The rules framed by the Local Government in 1880 in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by s. 30 of Act VII of 1888, are not retrospective in their operation so as to give the Collector the power to confirm a sale held before the date of issue of the rules. Nor do the rules authorize the Collector to set aside a sale. On 27th July 1889 the property in dispute was sold by the Collector in execution of a decree which was referred to him under s. 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). On 23rd September 1889 the Collector set aside the sale, on the ground that the auction-purchaser had purchased the property for, and on behalf of, the decree-holder. Thereupon the auction-purchaser applied to the Court which had passed the decree, complaining of the Collector's proceeding, and praying for a confirmation of the sale. The Court asked the Collector to return the record of the case, but this he refused to do, on the ground that he had extended the time given by the decree to the judgment-debtor to redeem. In January 1890, the Local Government framed new rules in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended by s. 30 of Act VII of 1888. One of these rules empowered the Collector to confirm a sale held in execution of a decree transferred to him. In April 1890 the auction purchaser again applied to the Court for a confirmation of the sale. This application was rejected, on the ground that under the new rules framed by Government the Collector had the power to confirm the sale. Held that rules in question had no application to the present case, the sale having been held before the rules promulgated. The Civil Court was therefore competent to confirm the sale. Held further that, if the rules did apply, they did not empower the Collector to set aside the sale or extend the time given by the decree to the judgment-debtor to redeem. GANPATRAM MOTTRAM v. XIX, 12th November 1883, Validity of—Act VII of 1888 (Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act), s. 30—Act XIX of 1873 (N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act), s. 244*—The authority conferred upon the Local Government by s. 320 of the Civil Procedure Code prior to the amendment of that section by s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VII of 1888) to make rules for regulating the procedure of the Collector in executing decrees transmitted to him included power to make a rule providing for an appeal from the Collector's orders. Cl. XIX of rule 17, which was added to the rules (No. 671 of 30th August 1880) published in the N.-W. P. and Oudh Gazette of the 14th September 1880, by a notification in the Gazette of the 17th November 1883 and which made the order of a Collector confirming a sale appealable to the Commissioner of the Division, was therefore not ultra vires of the Local Government. Madho Prasad v. Hanasa Kwar, I. L. R., 5 All., 314, referred to. S. 243 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) does not apply to such orders passed by a Collector. TAKADDUS FATIMA v. BALDEO DAS [I.
